Unclaimed Property Division

She's a finder

and a keeper. Are you?

The State Treasurer's Office oversees over $2 billion in unclaimed money. Some of it may be yours.

"Seeing my name on the list was a huge surprise. It was so exciting to find out that I had money waiting for me from a bill I'd overpaid eight years ago! I called the office, and the staff helped me file a claim in under ten minutes. Now, I'm reunited with my cash and plan to treat my husband to a fun night out!"

BEST REGARDS

IN A TIME WHEN BAD NEWS SEEMS TO travel faster than ever, it's good to take a moment to recognize people who put passion into their work and places that add a little more pleasure to the world. Our Boston's Best issue is full of both. In these pages, you'll find a pizza joint that serves slices with a side of social justice (p. 60) and a bakery where MassArt-trained talents whip up one-of-a-kind wedding cakes (p. 127). You'll meet a pair of siblings who built a platform for disabled artists (p. 100) and a design duo taking 3-D printing to new heights (p. 111). You'll hear about a musician who teaches kids by day and wows crowds by night (p. 104) and a salon that collects its chopped locks to help clean up oil spills (p. 123). And you'll encounter more than 200 other individuals, haunts and happenings that make life in Boston more interesting, in ways big and small.

Another winner in our book? Our cover subject, BU alum Olivia Culpo, a delightfully down-to-earth Miss Universe who chats with Jonathan Soroff about covering the red carpet and playing the cello for Snoop Dogg. Happy reading.

THIS NOSE KNOWS

HOW JENNIFER BOTTO CREATES PERFUMES WITH PERSONALITY.

HOLLY RIKE

MAKING SCENTS

After studying farming and cheesemaking, then dabbling in natural skin care and aromatherapy, Jennifer Botto decided to follow her nose. Last year, she launched her Somerville small-batch perfumery, Thorn & Bloom, working with botanical ingredients vetted by the Natural Perfumers Guild. But she still draws on her rural roots. "In upstate New York, we had about 20 acres on my parents' farm," says Botto, who tapped childhood memories for several of her line's current scents, as well as her forthcoming Evergreen fragrance, boasting notes of fir cone, pine needles, cedarwood and vanilla. "We were constantly going to the forest and having those smells around us."

But Botto's sources of inspiration go beyond the personal. "For me, working with naturals is about knowing the history and story behind it and keeping those aromatics cultivated, alive and relevant," she says. Those backstories range from the romantic—Cleopatra and her rose-scented sails—to the not-so-romantic: "Jasmine has this very interesting molecule, indole, that's actually prevalent in feces." Some sniffers find it unpleasant, but it's just the flower's way of attracting insects. "What you're getting is a story of its life cycle and how it's interacting with its world."

"In upstate New York, we had about 20 acres on my parents' farm. We were constantly going to the forest and having those smells around us."

Jasmine is merely one ingredient among the more than 300 aromatics Botto tinkers with at her Artisan's Asylum workspace. "My perfume organ has five, if not more, of each ingredient because I like to see the difference in terroir from one place of the world to another." Based on location, weather, extraction method and other factors, each can have a drastically different olfactory profile. After Botto starts with a basic idea—like a particular middle note or fragrance family—it takes her at least six months to land on a blend's final 12 to 15 notes. "I see where the scent leads me," she says. "When I'm smelling, the aromatics just kind of fit together like puzzle pieces." She sells the resulting creations online and at the South End and Greenway open markets, topping each with a stopper made by local woodworker Joshua Beckmann. Get a whiff of four of her current offerings below, and stay tuned for new scents featuring cilantro and coriander, lavender and osmanthus, and clementine and green grass. / Sarah Hagman

"My dad used to smoke cherry pipe tobacco. I just loved that smell growing up," says Botto, who also included notes of leather and amber in Stranger in the Cherry Grove.

Wild Rose, with notes of raspberry, took Botto about a year and a half to finalize. "I was fighting with it—it's changed a lot."

A 2016 Art and Olfaction Awards finalist, fruity, floral blend Bird of Paradise also features frankincense and sandalwood.

Savage Garden uses ylang-ylang, an incense wood—"It gives this ozone freshness, like after a thunderstorm"—that's complemented by bluegrass and palo santo.

MED SCHOOLED

JODY ADAMS AIMS FOR A FRESH TAKE AT THE NEWEST MEDITERRANEAN EATERY.

Porto
780 Boylston St., Boston

BOSTON HAS COME A LONG WAY WITH ITS outdoor dining spaces in the past few years, with prime people-watching patios seemingly crammed along every sidewalk in town. Despite the progress, Jody Adams still sees a void that she hopes her Mediterranean-focused Porto can fill when it opens next to Saks Fifth Avenue in the Back Bay in July.

Located on the ground floor of the Avalon apartment building, Porto's 50-seat patio is elevated above the Ring Road sidewalk. Planters will provide a little extra privacy for customers while they eat at the patio tables, relax in the white-cushioned lounge seats or sidle up to the marble bar.

"There aren't very many active, outdoor bars in the city," Adams says. "We're expecting this will be a happening place."

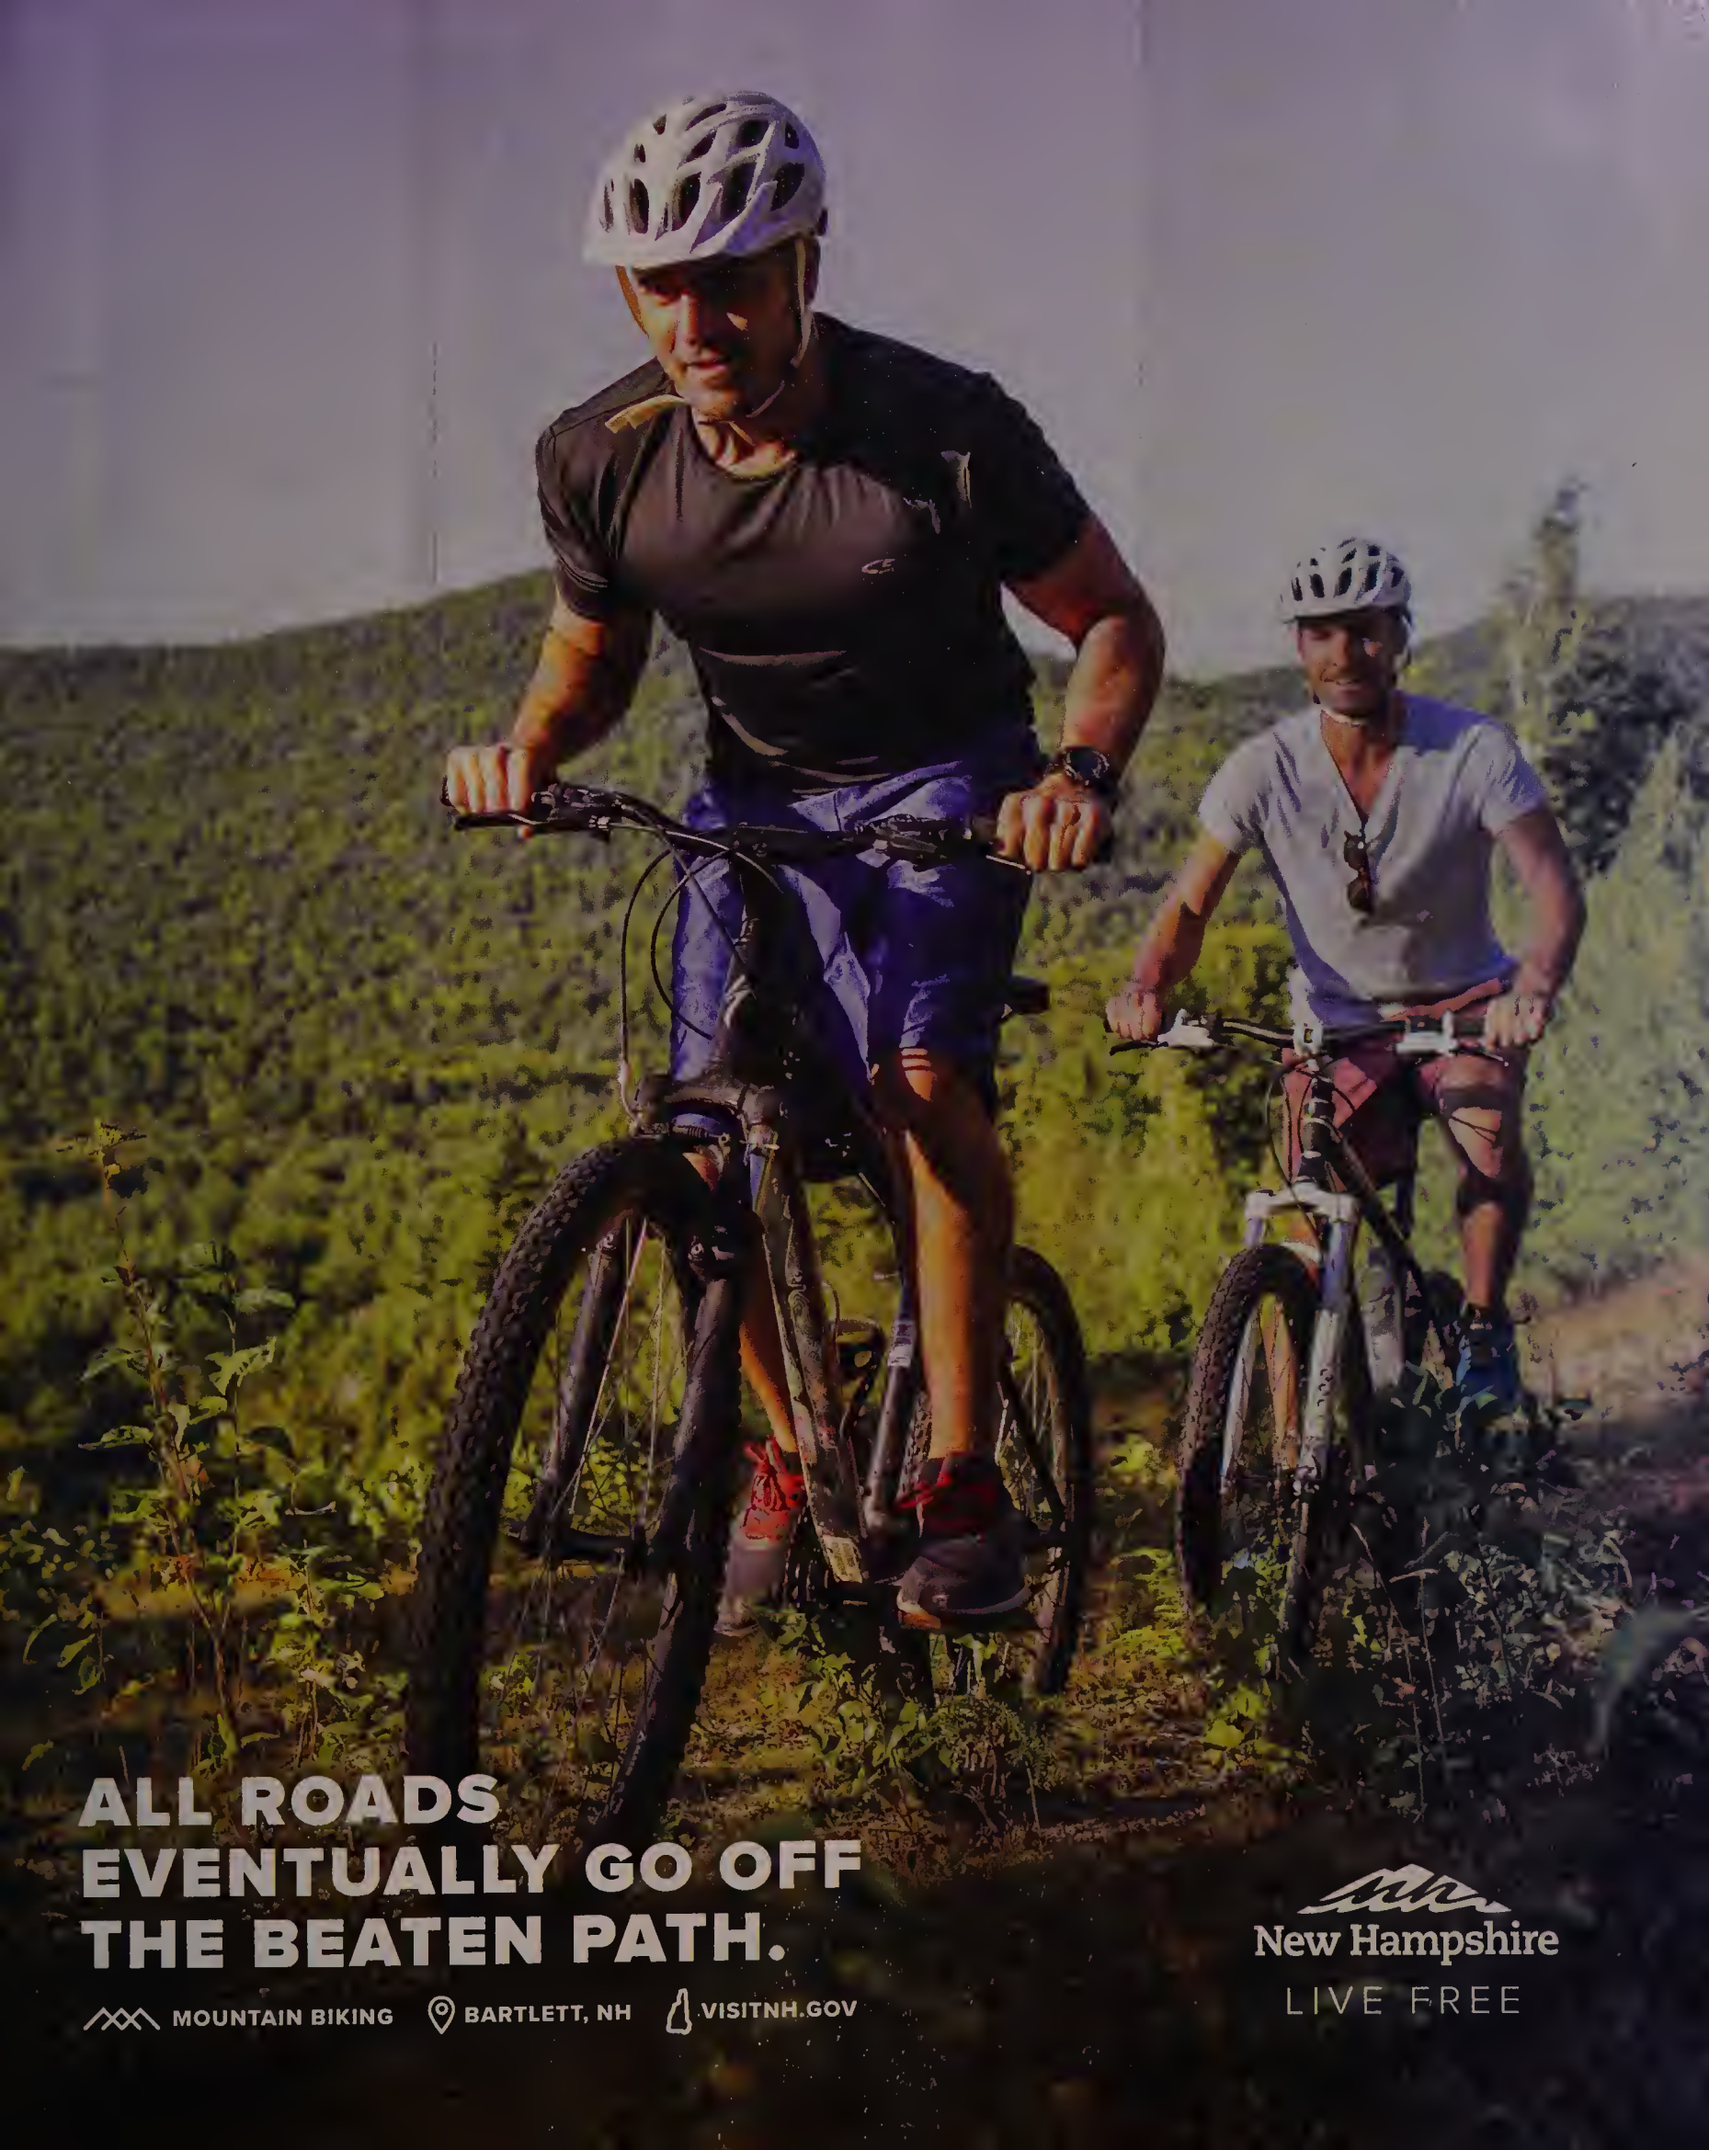
The 125-seat interior features a few different spaces: There's a bar with hightop communal tables near the entrance, while the back has a more private dining area with wooden tables and leather banquettes. Lots of light-toned wood, a marble bar sourced from the Mediterranean and plenty of windows lend Porto an airy feel that is expected to complement its menu.

Chef de cuisine Jon Sanchez is leading the kitchen, which will focus on shareable plates with a heavy emphasis on seafood and plenty of vegetables. Dishes piquing Sanchez's interest include clams with guanciale, fennel, white wine, garlic, tons of herbs and housemade bread as well as a lobster ravioli that features curry leaves, sea urchin and English peas. Whole fish, roasted and fried, will be available, as will a seafood board with 10-12 items like a spicy clam salad, pickled mussels with aioli and octopus terrine. The Mediterranean emphasis carries over to the bar: Mastika, a Greek liqueur, pops up in cocktails, and the wine list offers bottles from all across the region. Lunch and brunch will also be served, with Sanchez keen on brunch dishes such as chickpea pancakes with cherry, sea salt and maple butter as well as sticky buns with duck confit.

"You won't see a lot of molecular gastronomy. It's just going to be clean, straightforward, thoughtful plates," Sanchez says. "There's going to be lots of vegetables and herbs and citrus."

It's a flavor profile that's gripping the Boston dining scene, but Adams dismisses any notion that she's following the Mediterranean trend. Sure, she's set to open Porto a few months after she opened Saloniki, a fast-casual Greek spot in Fenway. But for Adams, it's not a trend. It's just the food she likes.

"That's the culinary world I've always been in. Rialto was Italian, and before that it was Mediterranean. Trade is Mediterranean," Adams says. "Mediterranean is where it's at."



Good Eats: Pasta Party

Including lobster carbonara on the menu was a no-brainer for the team at Sapóre Ristorante + Bar, which opened at the Renaissance Boston Waterfront Hotel last month. As executive sous chef Wallace Christopher explains, "Having Italian and not having that on the menu is almost like a sin." The result is sinfully indulgent. An entire Foley Fish lobster tail, claw and knuckle are mixed with crisp pieces of thick-cut black pepper bacon, heavy cream and a generous amount of Parmesan cheese before being folded into housemade garganelli pasta. A poached farm egg adds the perfect finishing touch. / Meghan Kavanaugh

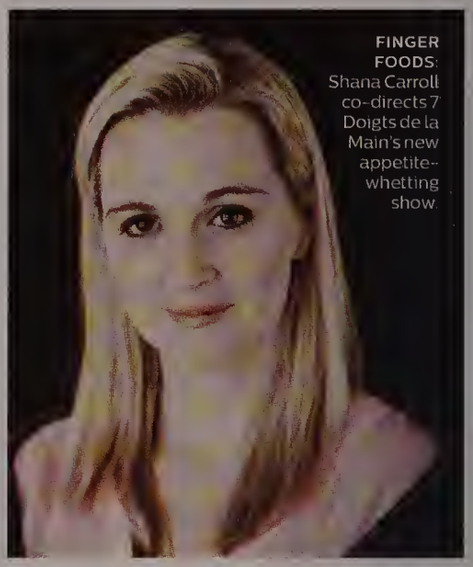
COUCOU'S NEST



When picking playthings for her own toddler, Astrid Motsenigos went back to the toys she grew up with in Spain and Germany. Now her international finds are stocking the shelves at CouCou, the children's boutique she opened in May. Whimsically shaped Goodnight Lights and Baby Bites shark sleep-sacks from Barcelona, handmade raffia toy baskets from Madagascar and Vilac wooden pull toys from France are just a few of the South End shop's offerings, many of which are unavailable elsewhere in Boston. "I feel like there's a real want in the mother community for toys that feel like real toys," Motsenigos says. "Something that you would want them to play with that's not electronic, that's not shouting at you, that's not going to break." Adults are just as appreciative, snatching up sets of colorful melamine plates and cups designed in Denmark that are pretty enough for patio parties and durable enough for snack time.

Named for the French term for peek-a-boo, the shop also features aisles spacious enough for strollers, lullabies in multiple languages playing softly overhead and a cozy room for nursing and changing diapers. A play area where kiddos can hang during shopping trips also accommodates drop-in and membership-based free play, along with art, dancing and yoga classes for little ones. "I saw that there was a big need in the Boston market for something like this," she says. "I want this to be a community place." / Meghan Kavanaugh

FINGER FOODS: Shana Carroll co-directs 7 Doigts de la Main's new appetite-whetting show

Q&A

IN GOOD TASTE

Innovative Montreal circus troupe Les 7 Doigts de la Main ("The 7 Fingers") begins its monthlong residency at ArtsEmerson with the U.S. debut of Cuisine & Confessions, a culinarily inspired circus show playing at the Cutler Majestic Theatre July 12–Aug. 7. Co-director Shana Carroll chatted with us about what the team is cooking up. / Andrew Elmers

WHAT CAN AUDIENCES EXPECT? It's a circus show with wonderful acrobatics, dancing, music and storytelling, but it also has live cooking on stage. We share the food with the audience while the performers tell autobiographical stories about their childhood and heritage through cooking. The audience learns about the artist on stage while also having a visceral recollection through the smells of the cooking. It is an interesting exercise to figure out your life through food.

WHAT INSPIRED YOU TO EXPLORE CHILDHOOD STORIES THROUGH FOOD AND THE KITCHEN? My husband, co-director Sébastien Soldevila, is very passionate about food, so I suggested we make a cooking show. And I love to listen to storytelling podcasts, which is where the autobiographical undertones come from. I think all of our shows have that storytelling aspect, but for Cuisine & Confessions, there are moments where we add sound bites from interviews with the performers to the soundtrack for their numbers.

HOW WILL THE PERFORMERS DELIVER THE SENSE OF TASTE AND SMELL THROUGHOUT THE ENTIRE THEATER? In the pre-show of the performance, the audience is invited on stage to help cut the vegetables. They can already smell things cooking in the oven, so you have that sense right in the beginning. Toward the end of the show, we bake banana bread, which can be smelled throughout the theater. Then there are other moments where we invite individual audience members on stage to eat the food, such as the omelet act when the performers cook an omelet by throwing the eggs and juggling the whisks.

Guiding you home.

RHÔNE GROWN

The Rhône Valley has long been one of my go-to sources for classy, barbecue-friendly red wines with spicy, lingering red-berry flavors. The sprawling southern portion of the Rhône region is home to a diverse range of grape varieties. Its wines are virtually all varietal blends, combining the plush fruity notes of grenache, the depth and aromatic complexity of syrah, the elegant perfume of cinsault and the herb-accented intensity of mourvedre. Each of these picks would stand up brilliantly to the heartiest outdoor deck or patio fare. / Sandy Block

M. CHAPOUTIER, CÔTES DU RHÔNE "BELLERUCHE," 2014

Michel Chapoutier is one of the masters of biodynamic winemaking, and this entry-level wine gives ample evidence as to why he is also among the world's most respected winemakers. Serious wine at a moderate price, it has smoky, somewhat floral, ripe cherry notes, and it's layered and vibrant with an earthy finish. This is one wine that tastes best at 60 degrees. Enjoy it with steak tips.

$13, Federol Wine & Spirits, Boston

FAMILLE PERRIN, CHÂTEAUNEUF-DU-PAPE "LES SINARDS," 2013

From the family that owns Château Beaucastel, one of France's most monumental wines, this Châteauneuf is full in body with baked red-berry and rhubarb aromas. It's lively, chewy and very concentrated with strong tannins and a gamey, savory, long-lasting finish. Grilled or barbecued meat with a tangy sauce would be delicious as an accompaniment.

$45, Boston Wine Exchange

CHATEAU MONT-REDON, CHÂTEAUNEUF-DU-PAPE, 2012

This is a lovely wine, a bit restrained and elegant for the southern Rhône, round in fruit and medium in tannin, but with some leathery, mineral, coffee-like peppery notes as well. Mont-Redon is the largest single producer of this historic appellation, but it is artisan-like in its techniques. Age this for up to a decade or enjoy it now with spicy, richly flavored stews or braised meats.

$50, Winestone, Chestnut Hill

Sandy Block is a master of wine and the vice president of beverage operations for Legal Sea Foods.

Our inaugural Boston's Best issue also served as our Boston's Worst issue. Back in the day, we liked to temper our praise with a hearty dose of grump. We've gotten decidedly less cranky since then, but for old times' sake, let's take a look back at what sucked in the early '90s.

WORST POWDER ROOM: FENWAY PARK Still true. Are you standing in urine or the contents of someone's $12 Bud Light? Probably both!

WORST SWIMMING SPOT: THE CHARLES RIVER "Fish don't even like to swim there." Also still true! But the seals are starting to come around (see page 141).

WORST FASHION TREND: PERMANENT TATTOOS But mostly because you had to obtain the ink illicitly—hard to believe tattoo parlors weren't legal in Boston until the year 2000.

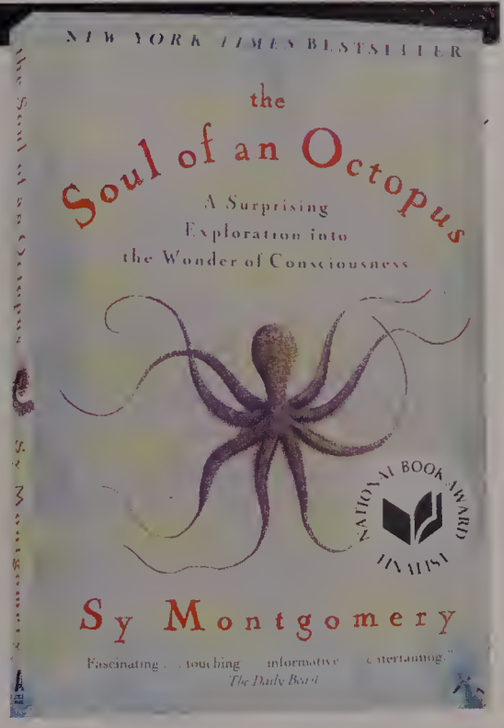
INSIDE A MOLLUSK MIND

A NATURALIST MAKES SOME EIGHT-ARMED FRIENDS WITH HELP FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AQUARIUM.



HOLLY RIKE

The Soul of an Octopus* by Sy Montgomery
Published by Atria Books, $16, 272 pages

WITH A MIND AND HEART WIDE-open to the fascinating inner and outer lives of animals—in this case, the octopus—New Hampshire naturalist Sy Montgomery immerses herself in the worlds of Athena, Octavia and Karma at the New England Aquarium, observing alongside aquarists and volunteers who become a loving family. Blending science and personal experience with poetic wonder, Montgomery describes how this invertebrate's sucker-studded arms can stretch out 10 feet yet also squish down enough to allow it to sneak out of a small tank opening. One octopus even hid in a teapot. They can change color with psychedelic variety to fend off or threaten predators, or turn blandly white to hide; they open bottles, teasingly play with food buckets, squirt ink to express negative attitudes, protect hundreds of eggs and show affection and consciousness that Montgomery imbues with some quality of the spiritual. She investigates their sex lives, too, paying a visit to the Seattle Aquarium's Octopus Blind Date, an annual event that has the creatures mating in enormous hugging entanglements.

Montgomery and Co. spend hours reaching into the tank, untroubled by the slime as an octopus wraps its arms—like affectionate bracelets—around their human arms. But our author decides to venture even closer. Scuba diving in the deep blue sea is first gruelingly difficult, but finally gratifying. In the South Pacific, she is transfixed by a wild octopus and other marine life, coming close, literally and emotionally, to her underwater soul mates. Describing the lives and antics of octopi and their human caretakers, Montgomery delivers intriguing scientific information, always with storytelling merriment.

FROM PAGE 89: He has managed to make this day a good one—a miracle of sorts. And who better to preside over such a miracle than an octopus, wielder of otherworldly powers—an octopus named after Kali, the goddess of creative destruction, the deity embodying the opposites of kindness and cruelty, sorrow and joy? ◆

GRECIAN YEARNING

KAVA NEO-TAVERNA ABLY FILLS A CHIC SOUTH END NICHE.

THE ALCHEMY THAT GOES INTO MAKING A successful restaurant is mysterious. There's plenty of old wisdom about the importance of location, veteran staff, price point, atmosphere and a timely concept, but we've all seen restaurants that fail despite these exact qualities. So how does it happen that Kava Neo-Taverna, a fetching little bandbox on a placid corner of the South End, becomes an immediate hit, drawing crowds from the neighborhood and beyond with traditional Greek cuisine?

Certainly the charming setting doesn't hurt: The densely packed, 30-seat dining room boasts a 10-seat stone bar, pale reclaimed woods, nautical accents and sunshine or streetlight streaming through tall windows. The busy 19-seat patio sits at the corner of low-traffic Shawmut Avenue, overlooking pretty Union Park. Traditional Greek music and the hubbub of conversation contribute to aggressive (bordering on painful) noise levels that can result in the occasional misheard order. But patrons don't seem to mind shouting; everyone appears to be having too much fun.

The drinks roster is no liability, either, with its fresh angle on the challenge of making cocktails when your license only allows cordials. Here, that means a refreshing spin on a G&T in the Cucumber Tonic ($12) with cucumber vodka, muddled fresh cucumber, tonic water and lime, or a Dark Cave Manhattan ($15) that takes aged tsipouro (imagine grappa given some whiskey-like softness and brownness in wooden barrels) with sweet vermouth, bitters and a good cherry. Of course there's a roster of mostly Greek wines, 12 by the glass ($9-$14) and nearly 30 bottles ($45-$150, most under $65). That includes a half-liter of retsina ($14), the ancient Greek white whose pine-resin aroma inspires equal measures of vacation-inspired nostalgia and grimaces from wine snobs. The half-dozen bottles of beer ($6-$8) include a couple of brisk, refreshing Greek lagers.

But I suspect the most magnetic draw is the almost primordial pleasures of traditional Greek fare, here done in very straightforward fashion with a focus on mezedakia, the sociable small plates that the South End clearly loves (witness its three Spanish restaurants, two pan-Asian small-plates places, the new cicchetti-focused Venetian bacaro, etc.). There is something elemental and simply satisfying in the endless combinations of atomic Mediterranean ingredients: olive oil, lemon juice and honey, phyllo, greens and nightshades, thick yogurt and rustic cheeses, lamb and chicken and seafood, the charcoal kiss of grill fire.

The use of Greek names may initially confuse Anglophones, but you know most of these foods intimately, if perhaps from less skillful or fresh-tasting incarnations. Feta psiti ($10) wraps tangy sheep or goat cheese in crisp phyllo and drizzles it with honey and sesame seeds. Spanakopita ($9) is mostly densely layered spinach flavored with onion and dotted with feta under a phyllo crust. Melitsanosalata ($9) offers a bright, simple dip of roasted eggplant, lemon, oil and garlic, here served with good crusty sourdough instead of pita. Pikilia ($10) offers three wedges of homey, pastoral Greek cheeses with a compote of sour cherries and honey.

Nearly unadorned, delectable proteins include maritha ($15), a generous basket of crisp, batter-fried (adolescent, not fry-sized) smelts needing nothing but a squeeze of lemon; slightly chewy octapodi ($16), grilled octopus in a puddle of oil, lemon and oregano; nicely charred souvlaki ($10), grilled kebabs of marinated chicken or pork; and keftedes ($10), juicy, sweet-spiced, flattened lamb meatballs with yogurt/cucumber dip. Enameled-iron casseroles yield stunners like saganaki garides ($15), baked shrimp and feta in a gorgeously straightforward sauce of tomato, slightly fiery chilies and onions, contrasted with the gentler comforts of imam ($11), baked eggplant, tomato, onion, garlic and stringy kasseri cheese. Horiatiki ($14) is an especially chunky, vivid version of the classic village salad.

The handful of a la carte, larger-format dishes include a hefty mousaka ($20) layering potatoes, roasted eggplant, a thin beef ragout and a thick layer of bechamel into messy-looking but delectable casserole; a staggering mixed grill ($32) of lamb chops, chicken and pork souvlaki, and the orange peel-and-nutmeg- accented pork sausage loukaniko; and lavraki ($29), grilled Mediterranean sea bass served (in a neat bit of knife work) whole but filleted, with a lemon and oil dip on the side. Sides to round out these big plates include bland patates lemonates ($7), the much more impressive bamias laderes ($7), a casserole of braised okra, tomatoes and carrots, and ultra-traditional horta ($7), cold braised mustard greens in olive oil. Desserts include a fine, not-too-sweet baklava ($7) and a pretty swirl of excellent Greek yogurt ($7) topped with honey and walnuts.

Kava clearly benefits a bit from the current super-trendy revival of more elevated Greek cuisine, managing to fall niftily between the more avant-garde Greek stylings of Brendan Pelley's Pelekasis (likely to graduate to a space of his own after an extended residency at the nearby Wink & Nod) and the pricier, slightly bowdlerized take that Michael Schlow is doing at Doretta Taverna & Raw Bar. More remarkable is how owners George Axiotis, Irakli Gogitidze and Shahrokh Reza have zeroed in on, and then beautifully executed, a relaxed, convivial, subtly sophisticated concept that fits Kava's swish neighborhood to a T. ◆

A: CoolSculpt is a very effective non-invasive body contouring treatment. The procedure freezes unwanted fat, killing off fat cells which are then naturally eliminated from your body. No needles, and no downtime. It is safe and effective.

Many of us have problem areas, such as our abdomen, love handles or saddlebags. Coolsculpting uses controlled cooling to target, freeze and kill fat cells; only fat cells are affected. After treatment, the crystallized fat cells are gradually removed from our body by our lymphatic system, resulting in up to a 20-25% reduction of the fat in the treated area. Results are visible within six weeks of treatment and the final results are seen after three months.

At SkinHealth, our clients have seen remarkable results with CoolSculpting!

THE BFG ★★½
Starring Mark Rylance, Ruby Barnhill, Jemaine Clement, Rebecca Hall, Rafe Spall, Bill Hader, Matt Frewer and Penelope Wilton. Written by Melissa Mathison, based on the book by Roald Dahl. Directed by Steven Spielberg. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

ROALD DULL

THE PLEASURES ARE SMALL IN SPIELBERG'S BIG RETURN TO CHILDHOOD ADVENTURE.

How exciting, in this summer of sequels few people asked for, to be treated to a new family film from America's best-known and most successful filmmaker, Steven Spielberg. When word first broke that the beloved storyteller would be directing an adaptation of The BFG, a wonderful book by Roald Dahl, another revered chronicler of stories consumed by millions, there was reason to rejoice. Adding to the enticement, Spielberg would be working from a script penned by the late Melissa Mathison, best known as the writer of Spielberg's enduring family classic, 1982's E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial. Also returning from that film are a couple of the director's long-time collaborators, producer Kathleen Kennedy and composer John Williams. They're accompanied by Spielberg's newest favorite actor, stage star Mark Rylance, who's fresh off his Oscar-winning supporting turn in the director's most recent triumph, last year's Bridge of Spies. What could possibly go wrong? Sad to say, more than I'd like.

The BFG may share similar themes with E.T., and Spielberg has once again captured a wonderful performance from his child lead (newcomer Ruby Barnhill), but he strains to find the magic that seemed to come so effortlessly back in '82. That's the same year Dahl's award-winning book was published, adorned with Quentin Blake's typically loose, lively illustrations. The endearing messiness of Blake's drawings is greatly missed here, replaced by the pristine sheen of expensive visual effects that try too hard to make the titular Big Friendly Giant and his surroundings look "real," in a production that's ironically unattractive and garish. In other words, the film's visual style could have used more, well, style.

Rylance brings a real warmth to his motion-captured role as the gangly giant who's nevertheless chided for his stature by his larger, more menacing peers (voiced by SNL veteran Bill Hader and Flight of the Conchords' Jemaine Clement). And even though the actor doesn't physically appear on screen, his facial features and expressions have been expertly grafted onto the crinkled mug of the computer-animated character, who greatly resembles the 56-year-old Brit—despite the BFG's enlarged proboscis and elephantine ears. They allow the two-and-a-half-story-tall "runt" to hear any potential danger as he sneaks around London at night, using a long golden horn to silently blow dreams through windows and into the heads of the sleeping locals. But despite his uncanny ability to blend in with street lamps and pine trees, he's spotted by the precocious, bespectacled Sophie (Barnhill), who's been sneaking about herself, avoiding detection by the administrators in her orphanage when she sees the giant outside her bedroom window.

Many of Dahl's darker edges have been sanded off by Mathison and Spielberg.

Fearful that she'll expose him, the BFG snatches the terrified "norphan." The image of a room-sized arm breaking through the moonlight as it reaches in to grab the "poor little chiddler" from her bed is an impressive sight, as iconic Spielberg creations go, but it's not nearly as creepy as you'd imagine, despite the fact that Sophie's been kidnapped.

And there's part of the rub. Many of Dahl's darker edges have been sanded off by Mathison and Spielberg, who's working with Disney for the first time. True to Dahl's text, the gentle giant is a "snozzcumber"-eating vegetarian who issues warnings about his "man-gobbling cannybull" brethren, reminding his abducted new friend to remain hidden in his cave. However, not a single "human bean" is eaten during the leisurely tale—unlike in the book.

Instead, much emphasis is placed on comedy. Spielberg has always shown a deft hand with humor when it comes to character beats, but as can be attested by anyone who's seen Hook, his misguided sequel to Peter Pan (and the film The BFG most resembles), he's far less successful at orchestrating elaborate, supposedly comical action sequences when he can't resist telegraphing the punchlines. But if you loved the fart jokes in Dahl's book, well, Spielberg apparently did too! Kids will likely enjoy the sequence that takes place in Buckingham Palace once the action builds to release. Ahem. Nevertheless, Downton Abbey's Penelope Wilton classes up her role as the Queen of England, as do Rebecca Hall and Rafe Spall, who remain composed through the flatulence, professionals that they are.

And really, despite some unexpectedly ugly visuals, which also extend to occasionally unconvincing integration of the live-action Sophie with the animated BFG, this is nothing if not a professional outing. Probably too much so: It's too storyboarded (that's Spielberg for you) and not nearly spontaneous or relaxed enough to completely win you over. Well, except for Rylance, who's so relaxed while mangling the Queen's English, he practically devours each unique turn of phrase Mathison has incorporated from Dahl's text. Or as he puts it, "I cannot be helping it if I sometimes say things a little squiggly," in a voice so soothing that he risks lulling you to sleep. Somehow, I doubt that's the type of bedtime story Spielberg set out to make. ◆

DUSTED OFF

A FARMER'S DAUGHTER ENDURES SETBACKS TO FORGE COUNTRY SUCCESS.

HARD-LUCK TALES THRIVE IN THE province of traditional country, and Margo Price taps a wellspring of such memories with candid, poetic grace in "Hands of Time," the opening track on her March debut, Midwest Farmer's Daughter.

Over six minutes, the Illinois native sings of her dad losing the family farm and taking a prison job, and of her own grief grappling with drinking, men and the loss of her firstborn son. "I cried out to God, is there anybody out there looking down on me at all?" Price sings in her clarion voice. "I want to buy back the farm, and bring my mama home some wine, and turn back the clock on the cruel hands of time."

The 33-year-old singer says that she didn't feel like she fit in during her tumultuous childhood. "Even back then, I had a tendency to be depressed," Price says. So when one of her twin boys died from a heart ailment shortly after birth in 2010, she says, "It seemed like a cruel joke. I just didn't want to be in this world anymore. But I had something really beautiful in my [other] son, and I just realized that I had to pick myself up, dust myself off and keep going."

Her trials have turned to triumph on Midwest Farmer's Daughter, its title a line from the Beach Boys' "California Girls" as well as a nod to country icon Loretta Lynn's Coal Miner's Daughter. Ditties like "This Town Gets Around" (a sharp jab at male chauvinists) and "Hurtin' (On the Bottle)" bubble in a familiar country vein. Yet even when Price digs deeper in "Weekender"—about a night in jail after a drunken-driving arrest—or "Hands of Time," she's to the point without self-pity.

"I just realized that I had to pick myself up, dust myself off and keep going."

Farming ran in her family, along with a love for old-time country. She remembers her grandparents' farmhouse from her youth, as well as the drought that hit the same year that farmers invested in expensive silos to dry corn. "They just had a bad year," she says of her dad's fate, "and the banker was kind of an asshole."

The music business proved as precarious a pursuit as agriculture. Price, who was singing and playing guitar and piano before her teens, dropped out of college to follow her dreams in Nashville. She played in bands (including soul-rock outfit Buffalo Clover) with future husband and current bass player Jeremy Ivey. They also spent time busking in Colorado—and were still on a shoestring budget when it came to recording Midwest Farmer's Daughter at Memphis' famed Sun Studio, selling their car and home-recording equipment (including a reel-to-reel deck snapped up by Alabama Shakes' Brittany Howard). "We had this whole little studio set up in our basement," Price says, "but it wasn't good enough."

Even with a finished product recorded in the same studio that Elvis Presley and Johnny Cash used, Price was dealing with record labels that showed little interest. One wanted her to drop the countrified touches. "I told them where they could stick it," she says. "It was a lot of rejection emails that I'll probably get framed."

Salvation finally came from Third Man Records, whose owner Jack White once recorded with Loretta Lynn. "They've definitely given me a newfound respect for industry people," says Price, whose album became Third Man's first country release.

Steeped in pedal steel and fiddle, Midwest Farmer's Daughter certainly sounds country. Yet Price conveys rock-savvy energy and verve that's more pronounced when playing live with her band, which winds from the Green River Festival on July 10 and Newport Folk Festival on July 23 to Brighton Music Hall on Nov. 11.

Clearly the hands of time have turned for Price. "Yeah, I'm very excited for what the future holds," says the singer, who performed on Saturday Night Live in April. "It's very surreal." Her parents are basking in Price's fortune as well. "My mom helps me with my son a lot, and they're proud of me. It's a nice feeling. I'm not feeling like a loser or the red-headed stepchild anymore." ◆

WATER WORK

LIFE'S NOT EXACTLY A BEACH WHEN YOU'RE TRYING TO FIND A PLACE TO COOL OFF.

IT'S OFFICIALLY SUMMERTIME, WHICH MEANS that you've got a choice to make: Pool or beach? There are pros and cons to each, so you've got to figure out whether you're a fool for a pool or a total beach nut. Let's splash on in and decide how to cool off!

Pools can be a great way to experience water without going to a lake or ocean—in fact, that's why they were invented. Pools are usually smaller than the ocean, but don't let that fool you: Many are as much as eight feet deep, the same as the Mariana Trench. And just like the ocean, you can hit your head on the bottom. So always wear a heavy iron helmet if you plan to do any diving.

Some people swim laps in pools. This is like pacing back and forth in a room, but way more intense. People doing laps usually get annoyed by people who are not doing laps, and who can blame them? There's nowhere else to exercise.

Pool behavior is governed by a strict set of edicts issued by the International Committee on Ineffective Rules. The most important one is that there's no running by the pool. This rule goes back to 1914, when Archduke Ferdinand was running by a pool and was assassinated by a lifeguard, thus starting World War I. Another popular dictate pertains to hygiene. You should always read the sign that says, "Shower before using pool," before not showering and jumping right into the pool.

Many pools smell like chlorine and pee, although there's been a trend toward saltwater pools, which smell like saltwater and pee. Some pools have adjacent hot tubs. These are neither salt nor chlorine, but are instead a primordial soup of roiling bacteria. Scientists speculate that life originated more than 100 billion years ago in a hot tub. But how did the hot tub get there? The Large Hadron Collider might have uncovered a clue when it isolated the Higgs boson and found that it resembles a tiny timer with a 15-minute limit.

In pools, the water is generally heated. The ocean is not heated, although we're working on it. Beaches are made up of scorching-hot silica and razor-sharp mollusk skeletons. Pools are surrounded by smooth wet concrete and stacks of people who slipped and fell. The ocean is often at sea level, but pools are sometimes aboveground, which makes it easier to hand Cheez Whiz and Skid Row cassettes to people in the water.

Now that we've thoroughly compared pools and beaches, let's just talk about beaches. You can drink on any beach, as long as you disguise your alcohol by putting it in a discreet container such as a Solo cup or baby bottle. Then the cop rides by on his ATV and says, "That's just a person wearing a hard hat with two baby bottles stuck to the sides and hoses coming down into his mouth. Probably nothing but Gerber in there." But if you're drinking from an actual can of beer, you'll be spotted from three miles away by a binocular-wielding commando atop a lighthouse who will radio a SWAT team to drop in from helicopters and put you in a portable jail cell right there on the beach. That is the rule for alcohol.

Beaches do have sharks, but don't worry: 85 percent of the time, they're only in the water. And the rest of the time, they don't venture past the parking lot. Remember, they're more afraid of you than you are of them. But just in case, your beach bag should always include an oxygen tank, a bolt-action rifle and Richard Dreyfuss.

Your beach bag should always include an oxygen tank, a bolt-action rifle and Richard Dreyfuss.

Sometimes the beach gets boring, but you can entertain yourself by building a sandcastle. All you need to do is buy a shovel, submit a proposal, acquire the proper permits and adhere to the various code requirements pertaining to temporary on-beach structures. This is a fun way to teach your kids about setback requirements and easements.

The beach can get hot, so you'll want an umbrella. Depending on the angle of the sun, a beach umbrella will shade either your nose or one elbow, but not both at the same time. To keep your umbrella from blowing away, you should bring at least two 50-pound bags of cement and a set of posthole diggers. Set the umbrella in the cement and let it cure. Then park your car on top of that. Then fill your car with cement and chain it to the nearest granite jetty. Your umbrella will still blow over, but look at how much fun you've had writing your initials in wet cement.

So, will you find me at the pool or the beach? Neither. When I want to cool off, I just open a fire hydrant and then go inside my air-conditioned house and watch the firemen ask the neighbors if they know who has a hydrant wrench. Besides, I'm a quarry guy. Geronimo! ◆

DECOR DRAMA

SOUND ADVICE ON COHABITATION, PARTY PLANNING AND TRAVEL PERKS

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I recently moved in with my boyfriend, a big commitment to be sure. If things work out, we'll be married in a year or so. He's a wonderful person, and we have much in common. The only issue I have (and it's a big one) is he has the worst taste in decor and furnishings. Honestly, I am no Martha Stewart, but he's got wooden crates to keep belongings in. He loves his leather La-Z-Boy chair (ugh!) and even has a glass dining table that he sprays with Windex after dinner. I can't take it! How can I reason with him? My stuff is not going to mesh with his. My tastes run toward Colonial and simple beachy styles. To answer your question, I sampled a variety of young people, married and not, who live together. In almost every case the answer to this problem was perhaps sexist. The women would say, "I make the major decisions about furnishings. I throw him a bone here and there for the sake of comfort and harmony." And the guys would say, "I don't care what furniture we have, really, as long as there's a great couch and a seat I can call my 'special chair.'" One of the women said, "It's not that my husband has bad taste. He actually has no taste. But he's got so many good qualities, it really doesn't matter. Chintz is chintz, and who's going to argue about a mahogany dining table?" This problem of decorating in a relationship should be way down the list of important issues, because it can be solved by his abdication in this case. He doesn't give a tinker's damn about the furniture, as long as he can sit on it or sleep on it. You won. You are in control. And if he were a horrible dresser, you could fix that as well. As far as other areas are concerned, like sex and children and in-laws and money, feel free to write in again when the real rubber meets the real road.

I'm giving a dinner party for 10 people, and I want to make sure it's memorable for the guests (in a good way). What can I do to enhance the experience, to make it different? First of all, I like to switch up the characters a little and get people out of their comfort zone. Don't just invite old friends who know each other; invite new people in your life, people from different occupations and walks of life. Just know that in Boston, if you invite people from different political backgrounds, it can be a recipe for disaster. So be careful about raising subjects that can inflame the guests.

I'm also a big believer in toasts and the clinking of glasses all around. If you're the host or hostess, mention something that defines your old friendship or underscore something special or funny that keeps you friends. It loosens things up. Then between the main course and dessert, as host, I would also tap on a glass and tell the guests, "Just to really personalize this evening, I'd like us to go around the table and have each of you tell us something about your first job after college." This little game is always a great character study. The responses are often funny, and they tend to teach all of us a lesson about human nature and the sometimes accidental nature of life. "What's the most embarrassing moment of your life?" and "Always have a non-negotiable demand. Don't be a schmuck."

"What's the best piece of advice you've ever gotten, and who did you get it from?" likewise sparked lively conversation at recent gatherings I've attended. Unless you're an amazing cook, dinner parties should be all about the company and the potential for new friendships. These elements are much more important than the food.

I haven't tried Airbnb yet, but I do use various travel websites to book rooms at good prices. Often, particularly in New York, I get rooms looking out onto air shafts or construction, and it kind of ruins the fun of experiencing another town. I'm shy about asking for a different room. I don't want to appear pushy. What? You don't want to appear to be pushy in New York? The inventors of this game? One of the things I preach to young adults is "You should have more Brooklyn and New Jersey in you." This means that, even if you're shy and self-effacing, there are times when you have to stand up for yourself. My first investment company went broke, and we were acquired out of bankruptcy. I was too young to be too damaged by this, and I took my client list and showed up at the new firm. One of their big producers of business said to me, "What's the deal you cut?"

I said, "I didn't ask for anything. I think that if I work hard and produce, I'll be rewarded."

"Don't be a schmuck," he said. "If you ever become someone who really brings in commissions, always ask for perks, for a bigger slice of the pie. If you stand in the back of the room, thinking you'll be noticed, forget it. You've got to be a little tiger if you think you're worth it. Always have a non-negotiable demand. Don't be a schmuck." He was right. Sometimes you have to learn to sharpen your elbows.

I know a very busy couple who are never satisfied with any restaurant or hotel. They have to always work it. But they have a sense of humor. Whenever they check into any hotel, the man will say, "Why don't you just show us the third room you were taking us to? It'll be much easier on you." Take a tip from the pros. If you're unhappy with something you're paying for, do something about it. ◆

Soroff On / Olivia Culpo

UNIVERSAL APPEAL

THE BEAUTY QUEEN AND E! HOST DISHES ON TABLOID RUMORS, ODD FAN ENCOUNTERS AND PRO SELFIE TIPS.

ACTRESS AND FORMER MISS UNIVERSE OLIVIA CULPO, 24, was born and raised in Cranston, Rhode Island. Her father, Peter, is a co-owner of the Parish Cafe in the Back Bay and the South End. Trained as a cellist, Olivia attended Boston University, and in 2012 she became Miss Rhode Island USA, followed that same year by Miss USA and then Miss Universe. She now works as a TV presenter, covering the red carpet for E! at events like the Emmys and the Met Gala, and is pursuing an acting career in Hollywood.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Favorite place you visited as Miss Universe, and why?
OLIVIA CULPO: Good question. I really enjoyed India. I love the culture. I love the food. The people were really friendly, and I got to see the Taj Mahal.

What's it like being such a huge star on Instagram? I think when you have so many eyeballs and so many people following you, you don't tend to post as much personal stuff, because it doesn't feel as personal. But I think it's a way to be creative, a way to tell a story, and also a way for me to see what other people have going on, in beauty, fashion, art and travel. It's like being the editor of your own magazine.

Best part of doing beauty pageants? Honestly, I don't know that much about it, because I only did the three I entered: Miss Rhode Island USA, Miss USA and Miss Universe. I didn't really grow up in the pageant world at all. That said, you get to meet women from all different parts of the world, so that was the best part for me.

Worst part? Probably how nerve-racking it is. I don't have stage fright at all, but having to answer questions you haven't prepared for on stage in front of all those people is tough.

Most uncomfortable? Being in high heels and a bikini is not comfortable. It's uncomfortable and unnatural.

So why did you decide to enter? I was at BU, studying communications and acting, and I knew that I wanted to work on my stage presence. I looked at a lot of really successful actresses, like Halle Berry, Michelle Pfeiffer ... a lot of really great actresses began in pageants. I was 18, and I won Miss Rhode Island USA, then Miss USA and then Miss Universe within a year and a half. It was a pretty major change from being in my dorm room at BU.

Favorite sandwich at the Parish Cafe? The Zuni Roll, hands down.

What do you consider your best feature? My pinky toe. Just kidding. Probably my big, fat, Italian eyebrows.

Your most bizarre fan encounter? I think it's always bizarre when someone is so excited to meet you. I'm not sure you ever get used to that. But there was one person who came up to me with a Barbie doll that had my face. It was sweet, but kind of scary.

Anything that really surprised you about being Miss Universe? I was really shocked and honored, and I still really can't get over how much it meant to so many people, all over the world. Something as silly as a crown and a sash that I was lucky enough to wear had this power to make people happy. People who were sick, or poor, it brought so much joy to their day. I honestly still don't understand it, but I feel very lucky to have experienced it.

Most beautiful person you know? My mom. She's got such a warmth and love for people that inspires me. She's proof that it's not so much how you look. It's how you make people feel, and she makes everyone comfortable.

Top three beauty secrets? I have to narrow them down to three? [Laughs.] Number one is drink a lot of water. Number two is get a lot of sleep. And number three is be careful with caffeine and sugar and alcohol.

When you put the crown on Miss Venezuela, did you purposefully put it on so it would fall off? No! Of course not. She kept moving, and she was like a foot-and-a-half taller than me. I couldn't reach. I really hope she doesn't hold that against me.

Tips for taking a selfie? You have to be facing the light and not backlit. That's the biggest thing. Lighting.

Why are people from Rhode Island so incredibly proud of their state? I'm so proud of it. I go back honestly multiple times a month, and I live in California. It's because there's a special simplicity and culture to Rhode Island. Everyone makes everyone feel comfortable. Everyone knows everyone or is related. Everybody comes together to cook, eat and have fun. It's just a very loving, warm environment, and it's really unique.

Do you still play the cello? Yes, I do. I actually just recently recorded something for a track with Snoop Dogg.

Favorite cello piece? The Elgar Cello Concerto. Watch the Jacqueline Du Pré YouTube video of her playing it. She's just amazing.

"There was one person who came up to me with a Barbie doll that had my face. It was sweet, but kind of scary."

Role model? I have so many different role models in so many different areas, because I have so many interests that are so diverse. In terms of acting, Sandra Bullock, because she's so real and funny and you feel like you really know her. Then there are fashion designers I really look up to, like Rachel Zoe and Victoria Beckham, because they have families balanced with really successful careers. One more is Jessica Alba, because she's an entrepreneur who parlayed an acting career into a huge company.

Strangest thing you've ever read about yourself in a tabloid? It's all pretty strange, but I always think it's funny when people say things like "She's obviously had a boob job." I've always been very petite and the idea that anyone could think I've got anything going on there is laughable. I'm certainly not busty.

Secret to being red-carpet ready? Have fun with it and don't put too much pressure on yourself. I will let you in on one secret for the summer: body makeup! If you are in a skirt or shorts, mix foundation with body lotion to give your skin a nice glow.

Any red-carpet debacles? So much can go wrong. Fainting, nip slip, unintentional see-through shirt due to a bright camera flash ... and I have lived through all of them.

Favorite red-carpet encounter? Sandra Bullock at the Oscars. I am such a fan of her and her movies!

Favorite for fashion: Met Ball, Emmys or Oscars? DUH, MET BALL! It is the mecca of all fashion events!

Last question: How long before you're on the cover of Vanity Fair? I don't know. What do you think?

Within the next six years. I love it! Now I've got a timeline! ◆

Boston's Best

Pinpointing the people and places that put this town on the map is our jam all year round, but we shift into high gear each spring, gathering a gaggle of local notables to help determine which ones deserve to be called Boston's Best. This year, we convened our panel of judges—arts impresarios, media mavens, hospitality stalwarts, nonprofit heads and sundry other overachievers—in a private room at Grill 23 & Bar, where we fiercely debated between bites of rib-eye and sips of wine. In the bleary-eyed morning after, we began tabulating their ballots, adding nominations from readers, contributors and staff, and got to work vetting the finalists. Only the very best made it into the pages that follow. We hope they help you chart a course for urban explorations in the year ahead.

LUKE'S LOBSTER

Notoriously insular Bostonians greeted the Back Bay outpost of the Manhattan-based Luke's Lobster chain with the kind of squint reserved for Yankees fans. But founder Luke Holden is in fact a native Down Easter and former lobsterman. His casual counter-service spot generously stuffs a stellar, barely dressed lobster salad into a proper toasted split-top bun at a very nice price. You should still seek out the Maine lobster-shack experience in situ, but we're fortunate to have Luke's worthy facsimile in town.

LITTLE BIG DINER

Newton Centre's beloved Sycamore got a bratty, talented kid sister this year in Little Big Diner, with its tight menu of noodle soups and rice bowls with pristine slabs of proteins. What nobody saw coming was the LBD Flat Patty, a skinny charbroiled beef burger with pineapple sambal, crunchy fried onions and mayo served on a soft, sweet King's Hawaiian Bakery bun. It's a kicky, off-beat marvel of contrapuntal textures and flavors, a rare original surfing a sea of samey burgers.

Dumpling Palace

To the delight of the food-nerd crowd, Chinese restaurants with a traditional bent are increasingly easy to find outside of Boston's Chinatown. The modest Dumpling Palace near Symphony neatly mimics its elder sibling Dumpling Cafe's strengths: the region-hopping eclecticism of Taiwanese cuisine, amazingly good value and the best xiao long bao (Shanghainese-style soup dumplings) in the city. A word of advice to newbies: Take a YouTube tutorial on proper XLB eating technique first.

CHILACATES

Jamaica Plain's sensational new taquería serves tacos, burritos and quesadillas with spectacular fillings, like tacos al pastor carved off a traditional trompo, adding thoughtful details like housemade tortillas and salsas. Trenchermen gravitate to Chilacates for the hefty tortas, sandwiches layered with beans, cheese, avocado, lettuce, tomatoes and jalapeño mayo on toasty, slightly oily telera rolls. King among these princely sandwiches is the torta de carne asada stuffed with sliced grilled steak. If you must punish your diet, do it with a Mexican steak bomb built from classy ingredients.

This upscale South End pizzeria is always packed, and not just for its great pies with lightly charred, bubbly thin crusts. The Greek Revival

Like a prayer answered by Poseidon, a wave of Greek cuisine has crested in Boston, where options were once lean. Seaport hot spot Committee tapped NYC-based Greek eats guru Diane Kochilas, Michael Schlow opened his seafood-inclined Doretta Taverna & Raw Bar, and Jody Adams' first foray into fast-casual is stuffing pitas at her Fenway-side Saloniki. Don't forget the pop-up Pelekasis or the South End's nautical neighborhood spot Kava Neo-Taverna. What the Hellenic is going on? Who cares! Opa!

BRANCH LINE

Back in January, we raved about Branch Line, the Garrett Harker empire's Watertown outpost: its soaring ceilings, the great beer-and-wine roster, the amazing rotisserie chicken, the amiable hospitality, the free parking. But the dish we can't help ordering whenever we return is the sugar snap pea salad, a complex, verdant stunner of crisp, finely sliced sugar snaps, red onion, mint, fresh ricotta and a piquant Marcona almond vinaigrette. We never thought a salad could haunt our dreams.

GANKO ITTETSU RAMEN

Boston went from widespread ramen indifference to underserved ramen mania to a plethora of ramen options in a few years. Ganko Ittetsu Ramen, a newcomer tucked in Coolidge Corner's Arcade Building, serves three types of Sapporo-style ramen. The star is miso ramen with a luscious, translucent broth, really good noodles, fatty pork belly and a fabulous five-minute egg. Craft beers and ciders are a welcome new addition. Ganko Ittetsu is a jewel in Boston's now-gaudy ramen crown.

Tiger Mama went into a tricky Fenway location that had hosted a couple of regrettable flops. Any lingering bad juju here has clearly been exorcised by Tiffani Faison's smashing tribute to a bevy of Southeast Asian cuisines. In a room transformed by a jungle-steamy makeover, Faison manages to take creative liberties with her sources without losing their most insistent, soulful flavors. There's always something new to discover at this South End gallery, from the identical triplet artists of Triibe's double take-inducing photos to the unsettling images that wait within layers of lace in Azita Moradkhani's delicate drawings of lingerie. Owner Arlette Kayafas taps diverse talent, most with local ties, and focuses on contemporary photography—which she's collected for nearly five decades—with some fascinating detours, like a recent show featuring innovative 3-D-printed pieces by Cambridge's Mags Harries. And her keen eye extends beyond the gallery walls to Out of the Frame, an online exhibition space that offers a platform for emerging artists.

THE KERFUFFLE AT IMPROVBOSTON

This monthly comedy night is booked blind, which means that not even hosts Jackie Arko and Hannah Foell have a clue what's going to go down. Held on the third Thursday of every month, the Kerfuffle is a mix of sketch comedy, stand-up, monologues and interactive madness. Participating acts are given a loose theme, but what they choose to do with their stage time is up to them. At a recent edition, audience members were treated to a screening of an awkward "sex tape" from a real-life comedic couple and plucked from the crowd to participate in a game show that had contestants identifying subtle differences between recordings of "farts" and "queefs." If it all sounds slightly unhinged, it is, but in the best way possible.

QUILT'S PLAZA

You don't have to remember the Summer of Love to appreciate Plaza, which finds Quilt channeling seriously retro vibes that are somehow as at home on our Summer 2016 Spotify playlist as they'd have been a half century ago. Mixing new material and revamped/reworked deep cuts, the indie-psych-folk outfit's excellent third album features vocals from three of the four members, which add to the dreamy patchwork air of its 10 tracks, all drenched in a golden sonic haze that both recalls and reimagines a bygone era.

THE INSTITUTE OF CONTEMPORARY ART

One of the best local stages for dance isn't technically a stage at all: In an intimate glass-walled space overlooking the harbor, the ICA hosts diverse and dynamic programming. This spring saw the Boston debut of Companhia Urbana de Dança's Brazilian b-boys, a twist on Antigone by vogueing phenom Trajal Harrell and a three-act spectacle from New York company a canary torsi that transported audiences to Louis XIV's Versailles. Add in Heidi Latsky's On Display, an installation featuring dancers with and without disabilities who performed over four days in June, and a summer dance residency program that draws top talents, and it's clear that the ICA is as thoughtful about art that moves as it is about works on the wall.

Since it opened in the Seaport in 2013, Laugh Boston has become a destination for local and nationally touring comedy acts. But many may be unaware that, once a month, it's also a spot to catch up-and-coming DJs. Electronic artists and producers selected by local music site KillerBoomBox perform short sets at the free monthly event, which also hosts "open tables" that allow anyone to step up and show off their skills in a casual atmosphere that's as much a party—food and drinks are served—as it is a networking session for table talent.

A recent contender for XXL's Freshmen 2016 Class, this Haitian-born, Milton-bred rapper dropped her much-anticipated EP Kiss Kiss in September; as expected, it was chock full of bangers, combining Dutch's poetic flow with slick, insistent beats. A recent video for the track "Mix It Up" was picked up by The Source and shows Dutch and her crew partying in Miami—not popping bottles, but riding bikes and cartwheeling on the beach. That down-to-earth vibe extends to her #TextDutch campaign, which invites fans to text feedback—so feel free to drop her a line when her follow-up, Bang Bang, drops this fall.

Air Traffic Controller's "The House"

Proof that music videos aren't going anywhere? One word: Lemonade. Beyoncé's visual album almost broke the Internet when it dropped this spring. But we're just as excited about the accomplishments of our local pop stars, like indie-pop sextet Air Traffic Controller's fun-as-hell video for catchy-as-hell single "The House." Produced and directed by local filmmaker Michael Parks Randa, the video was featured on mtvU and Funny Or Die, swiftly picked up by Spin and immediately had our attention. The video took about two months to complete, and it shows: It's a slickly produced, appealingly goofy romp through a teen dream world where the familics of a nerd and a jock merge, shaking up the natural high-school order.

ONCE Lounge & Ballroom at Cuisine en Locale

Given the recent closings of venues like T.T. the Bear's Place, Johnny D's and Church, the evolution of JJ Gonson's catering-and-event space into a dynamic destination for live music couldn't have come at a better time. Gonson has been cooking and booking in the Somerville locale since late 2013, but last summer, the venue got a new name, look and beverage program, and it's been steadily amping up the music programming, even hosting this spring's Rock & Roll Rumble. With a 300-person ballroom for headlining acts and a lounge for more intimate happenings, ONCE is twice as nice.

Wednesday feels like the weekend if you're partying with Louie Bello. The R&B/pop/soul singer won a 2014 Boston Music Award for his wildly popular residency at Abby Lane, and this spring he moved his kick-ass midweek concert series to Bostonia Public House. He's also toured nationally, playing sets at SXSW and other fests—but we like Bello best when he's rocking out in Boston, where he's been a longtime supporter of the local music scene and the city at large, with his hand in events like a benefit concert for first responders and a day job jamming with kids as a Boston Public Schools music teacher.

Held monthly at the Sinclair, Emo Night is hosted by DJs Luke O'Neil and Texas Mike, who mix '90s classics (think: American Football, the Promise Ring) with early-aughts pop-punk (New Found Glory, Fall Out Boy) and more. The Aug. 4 edition will have two live bands playing covers, and recent installments have featured booze sponsors, photo booths, giveaways and a collaborative Spotify playlist that allows attendees to add requests. Museums have always been ideal places for contemplation, but that's especially true thanks to new programming. Meanwhile, the Peabody Essex Museum hosted spring yoga classes inside Anila Quayyum Agha's installation Intersections, and the Museum of Fine Arts hosted Namaste Saturdays, bringing local yogis to the sunlit Shapiro Courtyard, plus a Mindfulness in the Galleries program with best-selling author Susan M. Not all artists leave a signature. Last summer, somebody grabbed the city's attention by patching a hole in a crumbling Fort Point wall with colorful Lego pieces. This spring, NPR tracked down the identity of that somebody: Nate Swain, a former landscape architect who's been responsible for other guerilla public art across town. Such installations include Barnacle City, two miniature metropolises made from scraps of brick and Belgian blocks that are visible only at low tide in the Fort Point Channel and the Charles River. Says Swain: "I like to poke fun at or highlight urban layout and design problems in Boston that most people choose to ignore." Mission accomplished.

Tucked floors beneath the sunny rehearsal studios and filled to the ceiling with bespoke ballet slippers, Mitchell's shoe closet features a wall of lockers into which she slips new shoes, each pair handcrafted and signed by the particular dancer's preferred maker. It's work that quite literally keeps the whole company on its toes.

BOSTON PUBLIC MARKET

No wonder crowds have been a constant at the year-round indoor farmers market that houses dozens of local vendors above the Haymarket T station. The 28,000-square-foot marketplace offers something for everyone: Local residents pick up fresh Siena Farms produce or Stillman meats for home cooking. Tourists flock for the gourmet foodstuffs from Q's Nuts and the Boston Honey Company. Nearby workers stop in at lunchtime for meals from Bon Me and Beantown Pastrami Company. Throw in hands-on culinary classes, and it's easy to see why the market will be open daily starting July 18.

» COLLEGE ATHLETE

Jimmy Vesey

The 6-foot-3 Harvard forward became the third straight Boston athlete to win the Hobey Baker Award, given to the country's best college hockey player. After finishing second in the voting in 2015, Vesey won the award this year by notching 24 goals in 33 games and helping Harvard reach the NCAA tournament for the second straight year. The 23-year-old North Reading native says he will exercise a little-used rule to gain free agency this August. With the Boston Bruins one likely suitor, fans are hoping he doesn't stray too far from home.

» COLLEGE PROFESSOR

John Leonard of MIT

Bill Belichick took a crack at it. A seventh-grader from Lynn did as well. But nobody debunked Deflategate as cogently as John Leonard, an engineering professor at MIT. In a nearly 90-minute video lecture, Leonard explains how science—specifically the Ideal Gas Law—proves those damn footballs were never deflated at all. Yes, he uses all sorts of formulas, graphs and terms like "transient phenomenon." However, Leonard is pretty straightforward in his explanation—enough so to earn kudos from level-headed journalists at The New York Times and The Washington Post. You can watch the full lecture on YouTube, but a 15-minute version that's garnered more than 60,000 views encapsulates the key points, and makes you wonder just what else the NFL is getting wrong.

» CREATIVE USE OF SPACE

Lynch Family Skatepark

The term "rad" might be a little outdated, but it sums up our feelings about one of the city's newest attractions. Plans for a skatepark began in 2000, and when it finally opened underneath the Zakim Bridge in November, it drew raves from local skateboarders—in no small part because more than 400 pro and local skaters offered input on the design. Connected to Charlestown by pedestrian bridges, the 40,000-square-foot Cambridge park is tricked out with three skating bowls, including one pro bowl that's 11-and-a-half feet deep. But the real gem is a street skating area with ledges, stairs and features that replicate storied skating spots around town. Sick move.

EDUCATION STREET, CAMBRIDGE (617-608-1410) THECHARLES.ORG

THE BOSTON PRIDE

The Pride more than lived up to the city's Titletown rep in the first season of the NWHL. Co-captain Hilary Knight led the league in goals and assists and scored the overtime winner in Game 1 of the Isobel Cup, which the Pride won with a two-game sweep. However, the team showed its true character months before the championship. When forward Denna Laing suffered a tragic spinal cord injury after crashing into the boards during the Outdoor Women's Classic, the team rallied by her side and have kept supporting her with fundraisers and the #14strong social media campaign.

» MIND BENDER

Le Laboratoire Cambridge

Founded by Harvard inventor David Edwards, Le Lab Cambridge is the first outpost of Edwards' Paris cultural lab, and it'll certainly get your head spinning. From a jellyfish exhibit that illustrated environmental woes to a virtual-reality experience that let users feel like they're flying, Le Lab challenges visitors to open their minds. The space has also hosted a music residency for the innovative Ecce Ensemble, and it's home to the inventive Cafe ArtScience, proving it's not just smart—it's well-rounded, too.

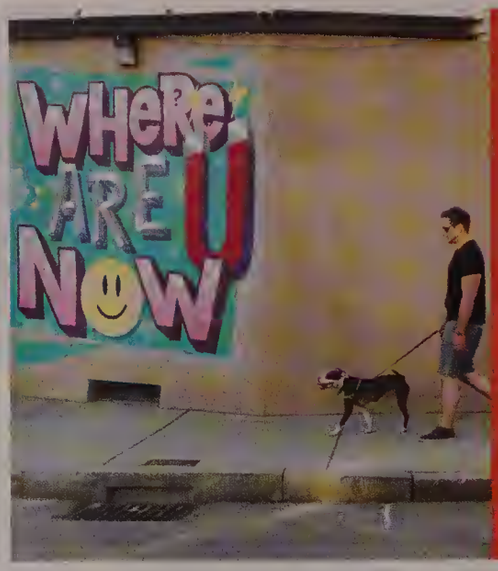
» REASON TO CRY



Somerville's Pity Party

Local artist and writer Greg Cook came up with the brilliant idea for a collective Pity Party, aiming to turn sadness into a less solo experience, and made us all crack a smile. Sponsored by the Somerville Arts Council, the cathartic community block party took over Union Square for a day in September. The festivities included sad clowns, gloomy songs, depressing art and even a tear dispensary. You should feel awful if you missed it.

» SCREEN TIME

Spotlight Wins Best Picture

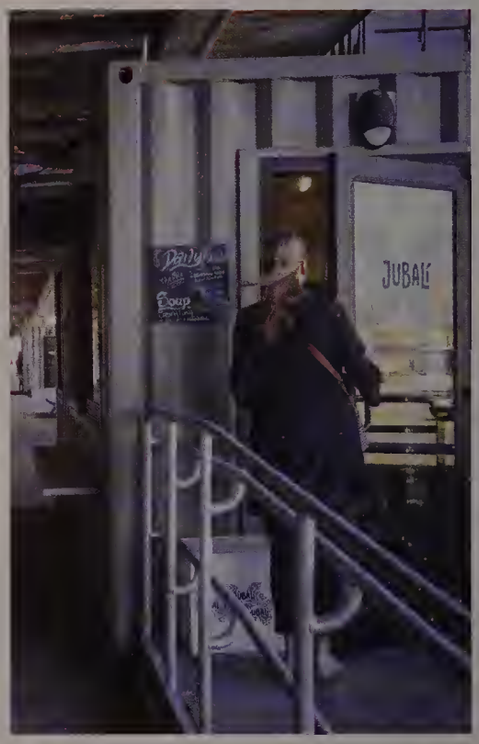
The Catholic Church's sex-abuse scandal is an all-too-well known story in Boston, so it's a credit to director/co-writer Tom McCarthy that the movie about The Boston Globe's reporting still felt fresh. A star-studded cast featuring Michael Keaton, Mark Ruffalo, Rachel McAdams and homeboy John Slattery drew attention during the filming, but it was the real-life Spotlight Team that took bows during the red-carpet season, culminating with a well-deserved Best Picture win at the Oscars.

» POP ART



THE JUSTIN BIEBER MURAL

Six months before Justin Bieber wandered barefoot around the Common, feeding squirrels and spending some time reflecting in a tree, he generated buzz with a little art in Jamaica Plain. In October, graffiti popped up seemingly overnight on the side of Ugi's Pizza on Heath Street. "Where Are U Now," read the bubble-gum pink block font, which turned out to be a plug for the Biebs' new album, which dropped the next month. Painted by local graffiti artists Kem5 and Deme5, it was one of 18 murals across the globe commissioned to market the new record. Did it work? We do belieb so.

» TREND

DESTINATION SHIPPING CONTAINERS

Shipping containers are finding second lives, providing flexible spaces that chefs, artists and even a barber have made their own. In the past few years, these crates have exhibited art along the Rose Kennedy Greenway, served as a mailroom for the Ink Block apartments and housed a beer garden at Assembly Row. But the Innovation and Design Building upped the ante in the past year with eight containers featuring food faves such as Mei Mei as well as service-oriented spots like Niche Urban Garden Supply and salon pop-up Cut-Splice. And ArtsCommons will soon launch a couple of mobile containers that will house performances, exhibits and more. Shipping up to Boston, indeed.

» STAYCATION EXCUSE

New Hotels Across the City

Staycations were "in" out of necessity during the penny-pinching days of the Great Recession, but all the sleek new options in town are providing enticement now. More than 500 new hotel rooms have been added in Boston in the past year, ranging from the 96-room expansion at Hotel Commonwealth (now home to a tricked-out Fenway Park Suite) to the new 242-room Godfrey Hotel, which sports a handsome marble lobby adjoining a cafe from specialty coffee pioneer George Howell. Add in the stunning views at Outlook and the indoor splash pool at Aloft, and you could spend a whole week hotel-hopping. And with more than 4,000 hotel rooms already approved for construction across the city, the options are sure to expand.

» VIGILANTE CHEF

Jason Santos

The blue-haired toque made a name for himself on Fox's Hell's Kitchen, but hell hath no fury like Santos. When a customer attempted to dine-and-dash after drinks at Santos' Abby Lane, the celebrity chef took off after him, finally flagging down police after a winding 15-minute chase through the Theater District. The story, which went viral, had chefs and staff in agreement that it was justice well-served.

» WILD ANIMALS

Charles River Seals

For decades environmentalists have been advocating for a swimmable and fishable Charles River, and this spring one critter gave its seal of approval. In April, a seal was spotted swimming near the BU Bridge; later that month, a seal was found further downstream near the Charles River Dam before being coaxed back into the Boston Harbor. The experts at the New England Aquarium soon weighed in, saying the crafty seal was likely trying to find some easy food in the freshwater of the Charles. Let's just hope the sharks don't follow.

AGENDA for 7/6–7/26

Boxed Out

Five days of Common fun.

WANT TO HAVE A summer so hot you're practically walkin' on the sun? Attending Outside the Box is a good start. This year, Smash Mouth—famous for that '90s earworm and that one Shrek song—is headlining the five-day arts and music festival. The free outdoor fest is packed with performances by local dancers, musicians, comedians, theater troupes, poets and more, plus national acts like Michael Franti and Spearhead, the Wild Feathers (pictured) and Daughtry. This year's edition introduces OTB Interactive, an innovation showcase with awards, after-parties and talks on topics ranging from the rise of eSports to the future of 3-D printing. Soak in that sun when Outside the Box hits the city on July 13-17. / Alexandra Cavallo

Outside the Box runs from July 13 to 17 on Boston Common and at the Paramount Theatre and Revere Hotel Boston Common. Free. OTB Interactive, $129–$149 for three- to five-day badges. otbboston.com

DISORDERLY CONDUCT

It's not cool to laugh at someone with a disorder. Unless, of course, they invite you to. Asperger's Are Us is a self-described "comedy troupe consisting of openly autistic people" who formed after meeting at a camp for children on the spectrum, where they discovered a shared love of comedy. The local quartet performs slightly dark, self-aware sketch comedy that has garnered the acclaim of NPR and The New York Times and attracted Mark Duplass, who produced a documentary about the troupe that debuted at SXSW and will screen on Netflix later this year. Laugh all you want when they perform at Improv Asylum on July 6. / Jennifer Usovicz

BALL HOG Again and again, the kids of The Sandlot find themselves in quite the pickle, on and off the ballfield. Between hurling quotable insults at their rivals ("If my dog was as ugly as you, I'd shave its butt and tell it to walk backward") and scheming to get smokin' hot lifeguard Wendy Peffercorn to perform mouth-to-mouth, there's plenty of trouble in this coming-of-age classic set at the tail end of baseball's golden era. But the stickiest situation arises when one clueless rookie swipes his stepdad's prized Babe Ruth-signed ball—which ends up in Mr. Mertle's English mastiff-guarded backyard. Reviews by Brett Michel

CAPTAIN AMERICA: CIVIL WAR ★★★ The latest addition to the Marvel Cinematic Universe could have been just as humorless as Warner Brothers' and DC's reviled Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice, but Captain America: Civil War is tremendously entertaining and light on its feet—even as we watch two friends and heroes (Chris Evans' Steve Rogers/Captain America and Robert Downey Jr.'s Tony Stark/Iron Man) come to blows. Unlike Batman and Superman in Zack Snyder's dud, Cap and Shellhead have genuine affection for each other, based on years of shared history, so it's truly painful to see them fight. Still, directors Anthony and Joe Russo focus on Steve Rogers and best friend-turned-brainwashed assassin Bucky Barnes/Winter Soldier, bringing closure to the Cap trilogy's larger story even as a new generation of Avengers are brought to the fore. A fantastically well-choreographed airport battle pitting a dozen heroes against one another is probably the best thing Marvel's put on screen—and it's just an appetizer for the atypically intimate and satisfying conclusion. Each of Marvel's new (and new-ish) spandex-wearers are granted great moments, from the introduction of the MCU's teenaged version of Spider-Man (Tom Holland) to the Black Panther (Chadwick Boseman) and Ant-Man (Paul Rudd), a tiny hero who brings ample humor. Somehow, I doubt DC's laughing along. (In the suburbs.)

FINDING DORY ★★★ Thirteen years have transpired since Disney Pixar's Finding Nemo swam into viewers' hearts on its way to winning an Oscar; fortunately, this sequel feels more like a continuation than a window-dressed remake. Returning director Andrew Stanton regains his sea legs, confidently diving back into the animated oceans after trying his hand at live action with Disney's 2012 mega-flop, John Carter. A victim of bad marketing, that under-appreciated fantasy is better than you've heard; you could do worse than seeking it out on video after heading to the theater for the fulfilling further adventures of overprotective clownfish Marlin (voiced once again by Albert Brooks) and his differently abled son Nemo (Hayden Rolence, replacing the now-adult Alexander Gould), who have settled back into life in their coral reef after returning from Australia. Stanton, along with co-writer/co-director Angus MacLane, continues to shine a positive light on those who are different, shifting the focus to Dory (the returning Ellen DeGeneres), the blue tang who suffers from short-term memory loss. When she suddenly recalls her parents, the three set off to find them as Dory also begins a journey to find herself, aided immeasurably by a deeper performance by DeGeneres. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

INDEPENDENCE DAY: RESURGENCE ★ Disaster movies were a steady part of the summer movie diet in the '70s, back when Hollywood regularly capsized cruise liners, crashed jetliners, torched skyscrapers and destroyed Los Angeles via acts of God. Tastes change, and the '80s saw the rise of the summer action hero. Then writer/director Roland Emmerich cooked up a new(ish) flavor of cinematic junk food for the '90s when he mashed the two genres together with his alien-invasion thriller, Independence Day. Well into the aughts, he continued making similar apocalyptic entertainments like The Day After Tomorrow and 2012, with diminishing returns. But after making a disaster movie of a different kind with his universally derided gay-rights drama Stonewall, Emmerich returns to his roots with this sequel no one asked for, which finds the aliens returning (20 years to the day!) to mine our planet's core—just because! Will Smith smartly passed on returning to the series that made him a star, while Emmerich has done away with the slow buildup to destruction, catering his bland concoction to audiences who've grown used to seeing landmarks obliterated onscreen every other week. Given the empty theaters this is playing in, I'm apparently not the only one who's tired of this brand of leftovers. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

THE LEGEND OF TARZAN ★1/2 I can't remember the last time a big-budget studio film was released in such a woefully unfinished state as this umpteenth take on Tarzan from director David Yates, who built his reputation with the final four Harry Potter films. He'll need to rebuild that reputation when this $180 million flop fails to find an audience. That's right, $180 million. For a shirtless guy (a bulked-up Alexander Skarsgård) who swings through the jungle on vines. Sadly, neither vines nor the jungle look particularly convincing, since nearly half of the movie's visual effects shots appear to be incomplete, as does the editing. This is an ugly movie, one that looks more like a video game than something you'd expect to find onscreen at the cinema. My guess is that Warner Bros. simply decided to cut their losses, rather than funnel more money into this over-budgeted monstrosity—which is unfortunate, since Skarsgård makes for a soulful piece of beefcake, while rising star Margot Robbie is appealingly scrappy as Lord Greystoke's wife, the not-so-distressed damsel Jane. Also unfortunate is the decision to add an American sidekick, George Washington Williams. As played by Samuel L. Jackson, this gunslinger leaves one half-expecting he'll recruit Tarzan for the Avengers. Ape-Man, anyone?

Love & Friendship ★★★1/2 The latest comedy of manners from mannered comic filmmaker Whit Stillman reunites him with Kate Beckinsale and Chloë Sevigny, stars of his 1998 film, the early-'80s-set The Last Days of Disco. He journeys even further back in time for this lovely adaptation of Jane Austen's early, unfinished novella, Lady Susan, which was published by her nephew in 1871, 54 years after her death. The book's journey to the screen didn't take nearly as long, but Stillman spent enough years trying to fund the independent film that he was compelled to reimagine and complete Austen's work in the recently published hardcover Love & Friendship: In Which Jane Austen's Lady Susan Vernon Is Entirely Vindicated. That title alone is vintage Stillman, so if you're a fan of his early films (like 1990's Metropolitan) that focused on differences in social class, you're in for a treat with his latest; the era suits him. Beckinsale stars as Lady Susan, a role far from the ass-kicking action heroes that Hollywood has deemed she's best suited for. Hollywood is very wrong. Sevigny plays Susan's friend and confidante Alicia, while Stephen Fry owns his cameo as her husband, the "very respectable" Mr. Johnson. However, it's Tom Bennett as Sir James Martin, the ridiculous young suitor of Susan's daughter, Frederica, who steals the film. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Maggie's Plan ★★★ Writer/director Rebecca Miller introduces us to 30-something school administrator Maggie (Greta Gerwig) when the best-intentioned meddler is mistakenly issued a paycheck belonging to adjunct professor John Harding (Ethan Hawke), a "ficto-critical anthropologist." Maggie plans to have a baby through artificial insemination, since she feels she'll never find love or be mature enough for marriage. She might be right about that second part. When John asks Maggie to take a look at his novel-in-progress, she not only loves his writing, but falls for him as well. So what if he's married with two children? Jumping ahead a few years, Maggie has become a minivan-driving mom to three kids—one with John, along with her older stepchildren—or four, if you include the man who avoids adult responsibilities by focusing his time and energy on the now-massive book he may never finish. Meanwhile, John's Danish ex-wife Georgette (Julianne Moore) is about to publish a memoir—with Maggie as a featured villain. So, Maggie decides to rebuild the home she's wrecked, restoring balance to lives that may have worked better before she entered. Miller fills the film with good humor, if not guffaws, aided immeasurably by a generous ensemble of actors who project decency, even when their characters make questionable decisions. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Me Before You ★★ Prior to the screening I attended of this adaptation of Jojo Moyes' best-selling romance novel, boxes of tissues were handed out. That's trying too hard—something nearly everyone involved with this wannabe tear-jerker can be accused of. Directed with a heavy hand by theater wunderkind Thea Sharrock from a maudlin script by Moyes herself, it features an appealing performance from Game of Thrones star Emilia Clarke as Louisa "Lou" Clark, despite costume designs that overstate the "chatty" 26-year-old's quirkiness. She's been hired as a caretaker for Will Traynor (The Hunger Games' Sam Claflin), a wealthy young banker and extreme-sports enthusiast who "out-Bonded James Bond" before a traffic accident paralyzed him both physically emotionally. But Will already has a dedicated nurse in Nathan (Stephen Peacocke). "What am I here for?" Lou asks Nathan early on. "To cheer him up," he guesses. And how. Still, problems stand in the way of the inevitable relationship, from Lou's jealous boyfriend (Matthew Lewis) to Will's determination to end his life prematurely. Tragic romances were so much easier when love meant never having to say you're sorry. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Neon Demon ★★★1/2 If you're someone who fell under the dreamlike spell of 2011's Drive, Nicolas Winding Refn's existential crime drama/love story starring Ryan Gosling as a getaway driver in LA, only to reject Refn's next film with Gosling, 2013's Only God Forgives, a far less audience-friendly slice of surreal violence/oedipal drama set among the streets of Bangkok, then his latest will do little to steer you back toward being an admirer of the Dane's work. However, if you're willing to give yourself over to the debauched pleasures of this provocative nightmare that polarized audiences at the recent Cannes Film Festival, you're in for yet another visual and aural treat that spirals into a dark, metaphorical underbelly of the LA fashion world. The porcelain-like natural beauty of Elle Fanning is used to mesmerizing effect as Dakota's talented younger sis comes into her own. She plays Jesse, a 16-year-old orphan (or runaway?) who's just checked herself into a sleazy motel run by an exploitative manager (a menacing cameo by Keanu Reeves) on her way toward becoming the Next Big Thing on the runway. Slick and sinister, with a hypnotic score by German electro group Tangerine Dream enthusiast Cliff Martinez, it'll have you either in on the joke—or repulsed by it. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Now You See Me 2 ★1/2 One of the biggest magic tricks of recent times centered on a theft, as millions of moviegoers were separated from their hard-earned cash when they willingly bought into the illusion that 2013's Now You See Me was a good film. Director Louis Leterrier's unexpected sleight-of-hand was aided immeasurably by a charming cast that included Jesse Eisenberg, Woody Harrelson, Dave Franco and Isla Fisher as "The Four Horsemen," a collection of the world's greatest illusionists who steal from corrupt business leaders during their performances and shower the stolen profits on their audiences, all while staying one step ahead of the law. Jon M. Chu's unnecessary sequel finds the Horsemen (well, most of them—Lizzy Caplan has filled the gap left by a pregnant Fisher) resurfacing for a far more convoluted comeback that pulls off the neat trick of being even more unbelievable than their first act, and they're joined by a new adversary played by a dastardly Daniel Radcliffe. Harry Potter, how could you? (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Shallows ★★1/2 Fueled by a suspenseful preview trailer, advance word on this budget-rate shark-attack thriller starring Blake Lively and her bikini was strong—and now that it's opened, critical response has been even stronger. This efficient genre exercise from director Jaume Collet-Serra (known for the lean Liam Neeson thrillers Run All Night, Unknown and Non-Stop) offers sufficient B-movie thrills and an appealing central performance by Lively as Nancy, a 20-something beauty who's trying to recover from the death of her mother while surfing alone at a secluded "secret beach" in Mexico. But then, hers is just about the only performance—although she's nearly upstaged by the injured seagull that shares the rock she's holed up on after being bitten by a Great White just 200 yards from shore. With ingenuity and pluck, this former medical student from Texas is able to suture the large gash on her leg with her necklace while figuring out how to remain alive. My critical response to this time-waster with dodgy digital effects isn't nearly as effusive as that of some of my overzealous colleagues, however. True, this may well be "the best shark movie since Jaws!"—but that isn't saying much when your nearest competition is Sharknado. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Swiss Army Man ★★★ When we first see the heavily bearded, disheveled Hank (Paul Dano), he's apparently stranded on an island, moments from hanging himself by a noose. Tightening the makeshift rope around his neck, he glimpses something we gather he hasn't seen in quite some time: another human, who's washed up on shore not 20 yards away, the surf nipping at his heels. Then Hank loses his footing, and we hear a snap. Ah, but this is just the beginning of the strangest comedy you're likely to see this year, the debut film from "the Daniels," aka Dan Kwan and Daniel Scheinert, a writer/director duo in their 20s who met when they were students at Emerson College. Turns out, that body is a corpse, but the real surprise isn't that the water-logged, sallow figure with a perpetually open mouth and an unblinking eye is played by Daniel Radcliffe. Instead, it's that his stomach begins to rumble, which quickly escalates into outright flatulence. Soon, Hank is rocketing across the ocean, using "Manny" as a Jet Ski propelled by, well, gas. All this before the opening credits—and it gets stranger from here. Could this be an Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge? Ultimately, it's up to adventurous viewers to decide. (At Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Wiener-Dog ★★★1/2 There was a mini-uproar among fans of independent cinema when word broke that writer/director Todd Solondz had cast indie film It Girl Greta Gerwig to play Dawn Wiener in his latest movie. How could he make a film named Wiener-Dog, presumably a sequel to his breakthrough, Welcome to the Dollhouse, and not bring back Heather Matarazzo, who embodied the role so memorably in the 1995 picture? Matarazzo, it must be noted, once famously penned an essay about how she'd lost a different part because the financiers didn't think she was "fuckable enough." Of course, if you really follow Solondz and his uncomfortable brand of off-kilter humor, you'd know that A) He'd already killed off Dawn (offscreen) in 2004's Palindromes; B) He'd recast all of the roles from 1998's Happiness in that film's 2009 sequel, Life During Wartime; and C) Wiener-Dog is not a sequel. What Solondz's latest is, however, is a very entertaining, sometimes uproarious and often upsetting anthology of four separate stories that are loosely connected (and occasionally impacted) by the presence of a dachshund, starring a terrifically depressed cast that not only includes Gerwig, but Julie Delpy, Kieran Culkin, Danny DeVito and Oscar winner Ellen Burstyn. So, buy a hot dog at the concession stand, sit back and enjoy! (At Kendall Square.)

X-Men: Apocalypse ★1/2 If there's one constant in the X-Men movie universe, it's how easily discernible the titular mutants are from the rest of us. Most of these "homo superiors" seem to be blue—and not just in the color of their skin (or fur or scales). The uniquely talented students at Professor Charles Xavier's School for Gifted Youngsters mope a lot more than your average angsty teen. Unfortunately, that's also just about the only consistent thing in this sixth film in the 16-year-old superhero franchise, the fourth to be directed by series originator Bryan Singer and the second to fall flat on its blue face. By far the silliest, most comic book-y of the X-Men movies, Apocalypse is overstuffed with inferior callbacks to Singer's earlier efforts. And Oscar Isaac, the talented thespian portraying Apocalypse—the villainous mutant and all-powerful "false god"—is wasted under mounds of terrible (and yes, blue) makeup that render the actor unrecognizable. Meanwhile, another series villain, the shape-shifting Mystique (Jennifer Lawrence), has been promoted to hero, reluctantly leading the proto-X-Men against an apocalyptic scourge of cheap-looking sets, cheaper-looking costumes and CGI that has the fake, plastic look to match the newfound cartoonishness of it all. For longtime fans, it's enough to make them blue in the face—or red with anger. (At Somerville and in the suburbs.)

OLD IS NEW Brand New haven't released a new album in almost seven years. So in January, when the Long Island alt/emo pioneers announeed a eo-hcadlining summer tour with Modest Mouse, fans lost their shit, scrambling to seeure presale tix for the shows. That cult fan basc is a testamcnt to Brand New's sound, whieh has seen a progression from the early pop-punk days of 2001's Your Favorite Weapon to the darker, more polished and refined alt roek of 2009's Daisy. The New York quartet have debuted new material on the road, but only in the past few months have they officially released two new singles via Spotify. Hear all that's new when the tour hits the Xfinity Center on July 15. / Alexandra Cavallo PHOTO: AK LACEY

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

WIDE OPEN SPACES It ain't easy being green—especially in the late 19th century—but that didn't discourage landscape architect Charles Eliot, who fought for the preservation of Massachusetts' natural landscape in the wake of rapid development. Frederick Law Olmsted's apprentice had a hand in the planning of Franklin Park, the Arnold Arboretum and the Fens, and the conservation pioneer also laid the groundwork for the Trustees of Reservations, which today oversees more than 26,000 acres in Massachusetts. In celebration of the organization's 125th anniversary, the Boston Public Library is displaying 70 items, from photographs and maps (like the one above, which outlines Eliot's 1893 proposal) to historical items, including vintage fishing lures, rods and nets and a basket that poet William Cullen Bryant once filled with berries. Explore the great outdoors at the From the Sea to the Mountains exhibit, on view at the Norman B. Leventhal Map Center through Aug. 28. / Sarah Hagman

ALL ABOARD

Exactly 125 years to the day from its founding, the Trustees of Reservations celebrated with an evening of epic proportions. The world's oldest land preservation nonprofit kicked off the festivities at North Station, where three vintage train cars waited to transport guests to the gala, held at Appleton Farms in Ipswich. Seen sipping Champagne in what once served as the observation car of the 20th Century Limited: party pair Peter and Kitty Creighton, the beyond-fabulous Uzo Erlingsson and her adoring other half, Erik, Beacon Hillions Maggie and Bill Moran, legendary investor Peter Lynch, gorgeous blond scientist Justyna Jaskiewicz and her main squeeze, Tim McKeown, and one person who said, "If the commuter rail were like this, I'd take it all the time," to which someone else responded, "If the commuter rail were like this, I'd never get off."

Upon arriving at their destination, the 500-plus guests sipped cocktails under a tent overlooking a cow pasture and then filed into another tent—decorated to a fare-thee-well—for dinner, dancing and more merriment. Prominent among the throng: board chair Dave Croll, equestrienne and art lover Beth Johnson, North Shore nabobs Clem and Stephanie Benenson, the lantern-jawed Jeffrey Rayport with the stunning Hillary, blond beauty Brooke Redmond and her other half, Patrick, investment guru Peter Coffin and his other half, Abby, the delightful and delectable Ashley Breed, arts booster Lisa Tung and the dapper Spencer Glendon, and a sea of formally clad others, who sipped, supped and got up on the dance floor until it was time to board the trains and return to Boston.

It was a truly extraordinary evening, and in all likelihood the only occasion I'll ever have to use the word "quasquicentennial," so here's to 125 more.

IN VINO VERITAS

Shameful fact: Boston has only one public high school devoted to the performing and visual arts. Thankfully, the Boston Arts Academy is nothing short of stellar.

That much was abundantly clear at its Apollo Award dinner, held at the Museum of Fine Arts. The glittery crowd included the likes of fashion plate Eve Rounds and the adoring Jonathan, Emerson grand poobah Lee Pelton, marketing guru Ellen Slaby, the delightful Kathy Sharpless, redheaded beauty Amy d'Ablemont Burnes, art collectors Ron and Ronni Casty, culture vulture Susan Schechter and her handsome other half, Bob, and honoree Kirven Douthit-Boyd, a graduate of the school and a former Alvin Ailey principal dancer, with his husband, Antonio. The entertainment by current students left everyone slack-jawed in awe, especially a hip-hop dance performance that prompted someone to say, "I've paid a lot more to see far worse."

Meanwhile, the evening's choicest exchange was this: "What brings you here?"

"A deep commitment to arts education and a love of pinot grigio."

A MATTER OF SEMANTICS

Isabella Stewart Gardner would undoubtedly have been delighted by The Gardner Remixed, the annual shindig hosted by the museum's Friends of Music. On a flawless spring night, musical curators Shea Rose and Simone Scazzocchio joined co-chairs Cindy Curme, Corinne Grousbeck, Richard Lim, Beth Martignetti, Laura Rehnert and Katherine Chapman Stemberg to mix and mingle with such glittery types as brunette beauty Christine DiCarlo and her affable other half; Mike, the flawless Sue Bear, Cambridge doyenne RoAnn Costin, dapper dude Freddy Martignetti, aristocratic literary agent Esmond Harmsworth, Beacon Hill beauty Tess Atkinson, Our Lady of the Esplanade Tani Marinovich and bright young things Will Heward and Ashley Wisneski.

After lubricating liberally with wine, guests gathered in Calderwood Hall for a concert by Women of the World, which garnered a standing ovation. In keeping with the evening's theme of Wanderlust, there were also viewings of Isabella Stewart Gardner's rarely displayed travel albums, an art-making activity entitled "Postcards from the Edge" and spotlight talks on the current exhibit Off the Wall.

The evening's best remark: "So basically, Isabella Stewart Gardner was just a hoarder with a lot of money and good taste." ◆

MAKING A SPLASH

"TAKE A MUSIC BATH ONCE OR twice a week for a few seasons," Boston physician and scribe Oliver Wendell Holmes helpfully prescribed, "and you will find that it is to the soul what the water bath is to the body." We're lucky to live in a town where our bathtub runneth over, as the local talents featured in our Music issue prove. Paul Robicheau rounds up 10 up-and-coming acts for our cover story, from the electronic rockers of Pvris and the metal heavies of Worshipper to the multi-instrumentalist phenoms of Palehound and Radclyffe Hall. Meanwhile, Meghan Kavanaugh visits a Brookline workshop where craftsmen spend 100 hours or more perfecting woodwind wonders. Alexandra Cavallo gets some music recommendations from the Boston Conservatory's first full-time hip-hop dance faculty member. And before her performance with the Pops, Jonathan Soroff chats with Broadway baby and former Smash star Megan Hilty about bloody operas and her fantasy duet partner. Happy reading—and listening.

SCHOOL OF COOL

MEET BOSTON CONSERVATORY'S NEW HIP-HOP PROF.

TEACHING HIP-HOP 101

"Do you know what the term 'hip-hop' means?" That's the first question Duane Lee Holland Jr. asks his students before beginning a hip-hop dance class. All too often, they don't. That's just one thing the dancer and choreographer hopes to change as Boston Conservatory at Berklee's first full-time faculty member in hip-hop dance, the Conservatory's first faculty appointment since merging with Berklee College of Music this spring.

"None of these babies do," Holland laments. "In Senegal, they speak Wolof, and in Wolof, the term 'hipi' means to be knowledgeable or conscious. 'Hop' is synonymous to dance, so therefore you are a knowledgeable or conscious mover of a knowledgeable or conscious movement. People don't understand that it's about empowerment; it's not about self-indulgence."

The Philadelphia native—who joined Rennie Harris Puremovement, billed as the first hip-hop theater dance company, at the age of 17—previously worked with Conservatory dance division director Cathy Young at Ursinus College. When Young decided she wanted to add dedicated hip-hop curriculum to the newly merged college's course offerings, she immediately thought of Holland.

"It's an extremely humbling opportunity because my mentor, Rennie Harris, is really at the forefront of cultivating hip-hop practice in academia," Holland says. "And as far as theory, it's definitely been cultivated in academia for the past 15 or 20 years, but in reference to [dance] classes, it's very new."

When he begins teaching this fall, his classes will largely focus on studio work, but Holland says it's equally important that students understand the origins of hip-hop dance. "Nobody talks about the fact that hip-hop was created in a time in the South Bronx when the state of New York didn't even care about the Bronx. They were like 'Let that place burn to hell' pretty much," he explains. "It was DJ Kool Herc who was like, 'Let me put these parties together for these young people to have something to do.' And it was them being able to turn back into their own communities to heal themselves that created this culture that has affected the universe. There is no other genre of music other than jazz, which is the father of hip-hop, that has affected the world in the same way."

> "There is no other genre of music other than jazz, which is the father of hip-hop, that has affected the world in the same way."

To highlight the history, Holland plans to bring in guest speakers like "Father of Hip-Hop" Buddha Stretch, popping creator "Boogaloo" Sam Solomon, locking trailblazer Don Campbell, Ladies of Hip-Hop Festival founder Michele Byrd-McPhee and Rock Steady Crew founders Jojo and Jimmy Dee. He hopes that such lecturers will help students to let go of any preconceived notions of what hip-hop is and should be.

"It's so funny to go and teach a class and people are like 'Let me put my hip-hop clothes on,' and I'm like 'You'd better take them off, because you're about to get sweaty. This is not a video,' " he says with a laugh. "What I want to be able to do is illuminate the intelligence, the sophistication and the spirituality of—not just the contemporary form, which is hip-hop—but jazz, blues, Lindy hop. These are all things that you see in this contemporary form, but unless you go through this type of contextualizing, people don't recognize it. That's what I feel like the program is going to do for the culture." / Alexandra Cavallo

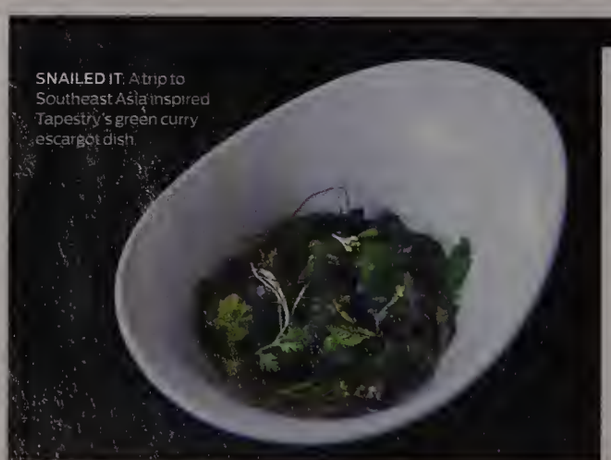
TWO FAMED CHEFS OPEN LITTLE DONKEY IN CAMBRIDGE

Little Donkey
505 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
(617-945-1008) littledonkeybos.com

It's a proven recipe for success: Jamie Bissonnette and Ken Oringer team up to open a new restaurant. But it's been nearly seven years since the dynamic duo behind Toro and Coppa last hung a shingle here, with new Toro outposts in New York and Bangkok—and soon Dubai—taking their attention.

Now the wait is over, as mid-July saw the opening of Little Donkey, their 90-seat spot in Central Square. "It's like when they say you're bringing the band back together," Oringer says. "All the people who have helped open our other restaurants here have come to help out. It's an amazing management team, and it's nice to really feel the community."

Bissonnette echoes that sentiment. "Whenever we do something together, it's always more fun," he says. "And I think the food is better when we work together. We've been doing it now for a long enough period of time that with some of these sections you don't even remember whose idea each dish was."



The dinner menu is split into sections for charcuterie, hors d'oeuvres, pastas and grains, vegetables and salads, and meat and fish. Early staff favorites include a little gem salad with Louis dressing, heirloom tomatoes and migas as well as a pickle brine fried chicken sandwich with papaya slaw, jalapeno and avocado ranch. But it's the donkey platter that's really exciting Oringer. The dish features seafood such as live sea urchin, king crab, live scallops, striped bass ceviche, salmon roe, oysters, clams and tuna poke served with rye bread, nori butter and sea salt.

"It's kind of a riff on what they serve at raw bars in France and Brittany," Oringer says. "That's something that if you're with a group of four people, I'd love to see one of those on every table, that's for damn sure."

With breakfast and lunch service planned to start in mid-August, as well as blackboard late-night specials, there are even more dishes in the works. Breakfast—Bissonnette's favorite meal of the day—was inspired by the pair's travels around the world but will also include baked goods such as miso banana bread and plum galette. Vikram Hegde (Sarma, Island Creek Oyster Bar) will spearhead the cocktail program, while Jodie Battles, the current beverage director at Toro, will hold the same role at Little Donkey, picking a lineup of local and sour beers as well as a global wine list.

"She knows us really well. She understands the flavors that go with the kind of foods that we like to cook," Oringer says. "It's been great to see her get out of her element of picking mostly Spanish or mostly Italian wines. Now we have a list that can have wines from anywhere you can imagine, and it does."

The chefs are likewise savoring the freedom that comes with serving globally influenced dishes at all times of day. "This became a restaurant we wanted to do that was an outlet for us, and it wasn't Spanish and it wasn't Italian," Bissonnette says. "We can cook like we'd be cooking if we were at home."

SNAILED IT. A trip to Southeast Asia inspired Tapestry's green curry escargot dish.

Good Eats: Curry Favor

During a recent trip to Southeast Asia, Tapestry chef/owners Meghann Ward and Kevin Walsh's obsession with green curry culminated in an informal tutorial inside an acquaintance's Thai kitchen. The husband-and-wife team have since perfected their own version for the new Fenway restaurant's green curry escargot dish, using the curry broth to braise the snails before topping them with peas and asparagus as well as herbs, chili threads, sea lettuce and nasturtium. The broth has made snail converts out of many diners, Ward says, and the dish is available in both of Tapestry's spaces—the casual Expo Kitchen and the more formal Club Room. / Meghan Kavanaugh

CODE OF CONDUCT

Royal Philharmonic artistic director and principal conductor Charles Dutoit made his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1981 and has returned to guest conduct the BSO again and again in the years since. Now the BSO is honoring the venerable Swiss conductor with the title of 2016 Koussevitzky Artist, which acknowledges his considerable contributions to the orchestra over the past 35 years. We caught up with the well-traveled maestro—who's visited every country on earth—before he lands in Massachusetts to conduct four programs at Tanglewood on Aug. 12, 15, 18 and 19, just two months shy of his 80th birthday. / Alexandra Cavallo

YOU MUST BE EXCITED ABOUT THIS SEASON... I love Tanglewood. I love the Boston Symphony. I have all my life. I was a student at Tanglewood many decades ago. So I've always kept a close relationship with Tanglewood and the Boston Symphony. I was listening to the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall in 1959. Imagine that? At the time, I was a conducting student in Switzerland, and I could not imagine that one day I'd be so closely associated with the Boston Symphony. Because that was the first orchestra I heard in America.

SO, I UNDERSTAND YOU'VE TRAVELED TO ALL 196 COUNTRIES. THAT'S INCREDIBLE. Yes! But this is 50 years of traveling. It wasn't done in one season, you know. [Laughs.] I think it's a question of wanting to do it, too. If you just let your life go as it comes, you'll never achieve things like that. Never in my mind was there this idea of having this marathon...but curiosity, I was very curious to see the whole world.

NOTEWORTHY: Charles Dutoit returns to guest conduct the BSO in August.

WHAT HAVE BEEN SOME OF YOUR FAVORITE PLACES TO VISIT? It depends on which point of view, frankly. But to think of the natural beauty of nature, I love to be in the American West, in Arizona and all of these places, because this is what America was in my mind when I was a kid. I was looking at the Western films; this was America for me. ... But I read a lot about the countries I was going to visit, trying not to judge these countries with my own criteria, by things I have at home, but to judge them as themselves, for what they are. To be wide open and not compare them all the time, which is a bad habit. I've been twice to North Korea and met wonderful musicians, and despite their incredible government, which of course no one would support, the people there are just like you and me. I had experience working with some of these musicians, and they were discovering what an orchestra's sound should be, and they were crying! So all these experiences are very rich and very important.

WHEN YOU TRAVEL, DO YOU LISTEN TO CLASSICAL MUSIC ON THE PLANE? No, no, no. I listen to classical music when I can go to a concert, to listen to a colleague or a friend, but I very rarely listen to a recording at home or on the plane. I like to look at a film or read. When you do so many concerts a year and you have some time off, you don't do the same thing. [Laughs.]

WHAT KIND OF MOVIES DO YOU LIKE? I basically only see them on the flights! But you know, just yesterday I saw that fantastic Boston movie with DiCaprio—The Departed! That is the last one I saw, and I liked it very much. I had a hard time understanding it at the beginning. You have to concentrate to figure out who these guys are exactly and who they're working for. [Laughs.] I love these actors. I love Nicholson. I think he has a great presence. But I also like things that are not so serious. It really depends on what they are presenting on the plane!

UPGRADE IN GOOD PUN

For groupies who are tired of overpriced selections at the band's merch table, new Boston-based brand Pun Pantry is serving a witty alternative. Dishing out T-shirts, sweatshirts and other wares adorned with music-meets-food mashups, such as "The Notorious BLT" and "Radiobread," Pun Pantry is trying to sell a "good laugh and a smile," says co-creator Patrick Lindquist. The first pun—the Chicken KeBob Dylan—came about after a meal shared by Lindquist and fellow co-creator Vinny Prezioso at Felipe's Taqueria in Harvard Square. The pair stewed over their ideas for a year before illustrator Nick Nazzaro came along and added crisp designs to the ripe puns. They launched the brand through online marketplace Redbubble back in October, and the team has since hawked their wares at local markets, including the SoWa Open Market and Boston Hassle's Black Market. "Selling our shirts on our own now has been a big help, because it's easier to talk with customers and make it more personal than shopping online," Prezioso explains. And the guys behind Pun Pantry don't want to stop at T-shirts. They've developed recipes based on their puns ("Rolling Scones" for breakfast and "Wu-Tang Clam Chowder" for lunch), and they hope to publish a cookbook to pair with the main course. / Andrew Elmers

Drink of the Moment

CHARLES MARIE

WARD 8
90 N. Washington St., Boston
(617-823-4478) ward8.com

PRICE: $10

INGREDIENTS: Passion fruit, green Chartreuse, cacao-infused sweet vermouth and club soda

BEST SUITED FOR: "Someone a little more adventurous," says Ward 8 general manager Mike Wyatt. "The flavors are a little more bold." Not unlike its namesake, a Parisian geographer who explored Ecuador—thus, the French liqueur and tropical influence. The Tiki-like cocktail takes tartness from the passion fruit, some sweetness from the Chartreuse and vermouth and a bit of brightness from the bubbles.

PAIR IT WITH: Blackened swordfish with sweet corn hash and chili oil ($25).

SUMMERTIME AND THE DRINKIN' IS EASY: Two things warm-weather cocktails should be, per Wyatt: "Refreshing and ice cold." This cocktail, which debuted last month alongside a handful of other seasonal sips, fits the bill on both counts. "And it shouldn't be over-the-top boozy." See also: the equally mouthwatering After School Special, a mix of Ketel Oranje and falernum—"if orgeat was alcoholic, with some spiced notes," says Wyatt—plus pineapple and mango pale ale.

FUN FACT: Though the restaurant is named Ward 8—after the Locke-Ober-founded cocktail whose origins go back to pol Martin Lomasney's state legislature run—it's actually located in Ward 3.

FOR YOUR NEXT ROUND: If you're looking for a classic cocktail to order right now, other than the Ward 8, Wyatt has a recommendation. "Definitely a daiquiri," he says. "A lot of people have this idea that it should come from a slushie machine, but the classic is shaken, with rum, lime and sugar." Order up. / Sarah Hagman

Out of THE VAULT

25 YEARS

The Improper is celebrating its 25th anniversary in 2016, and to properly mark the occasion, we're digging through the archives for gems from issues past. Behold, some highlights from past music coverage.

Aug. 4, 1993

In this installment of our Woman on the Street column, we asked passers-by what they thought of Boston's music scene. On this occasion, one of those passers-by just happened to be Mighty Mighty Bosstones frontman Dicky Barrett, who opined, "Boston is artistically smarter than most cities. Even at its weakest, it's still the best." Amy, 22, however, disagreed, complaining, "I think it's lame. The clubs don't stay open late..." Can't argue with either of those statements, tbh.

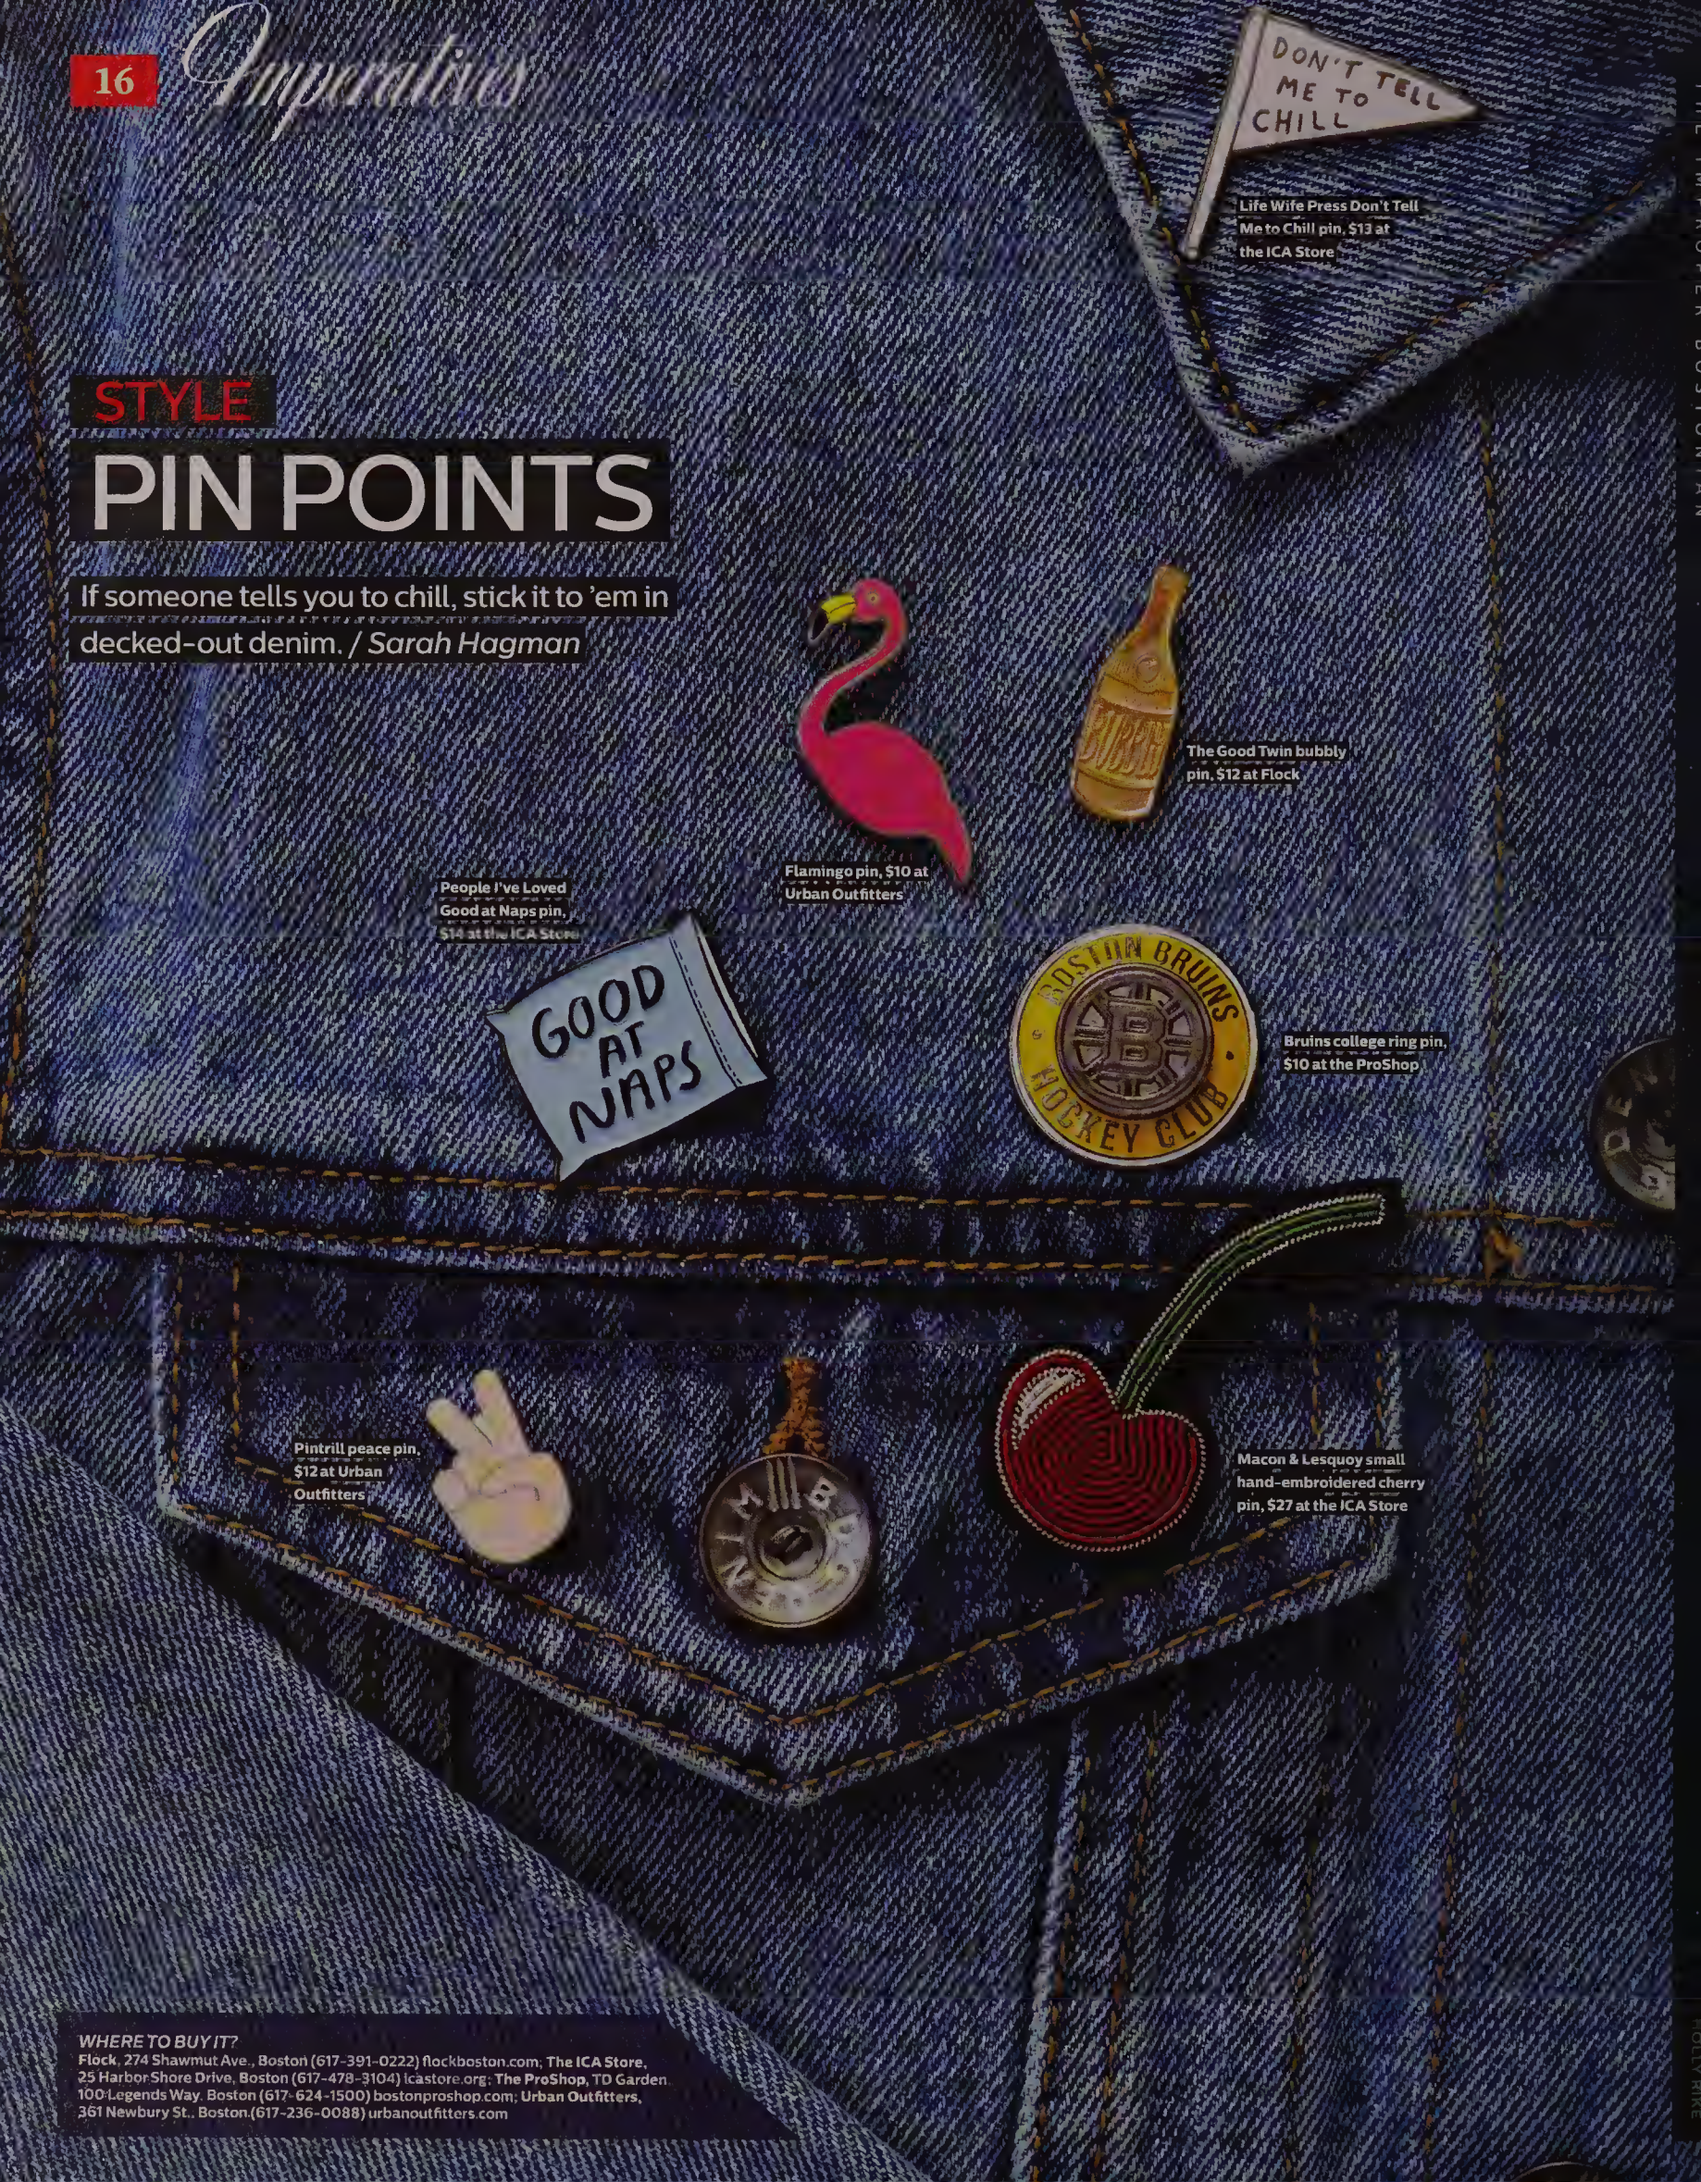
April 26, 1995



This cover story introduced Boston to the then 35-year-old Keith Lockhart—practically a baby in the world of classical music—a fresh-faced, photogenic young conductor who breezed into the Bean with big plans to liven up a sometimes-stodgy scene. "I suppose, at least by classical music standards, I'm a bit irreverent," he told our writer over muffins at the Four Seasons. More than two decades on, that irreverence has obviously paid off, with Lockhart still at the helm of the ever-evolving orchestra.

Aug. 17, 2005

In this '05 Boston Rocks issue, Jonathan Soroff sat down with Ken Casey of Boston's house band, the Dropkick Murphys, who gave candid answers to questions like "Exactly how far can you drop-kick a Murphy?" ("Not very. We're all pretty fat.") and "Should the gays get to march in the St. Patrick's Day Parade?" ("Let 'em all march! Who cares? As long as they're drinkin', I don't. Hell, we can marry 'em at the end of the parade.")

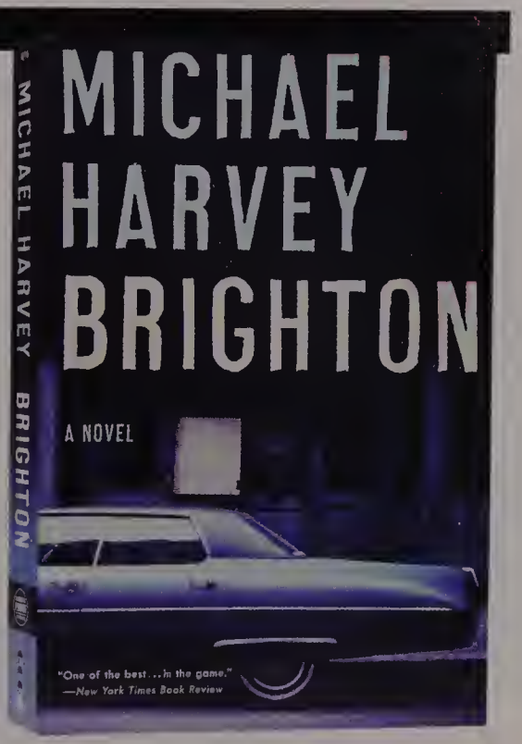
BRIGHTON DARKENS



A BOSTON-BRED CRIME WRITER TAPS INTO SOME LOCAL FLAVOR FOR HIS SEVENTH NOVEL.

Brighton* by Michael Harvey
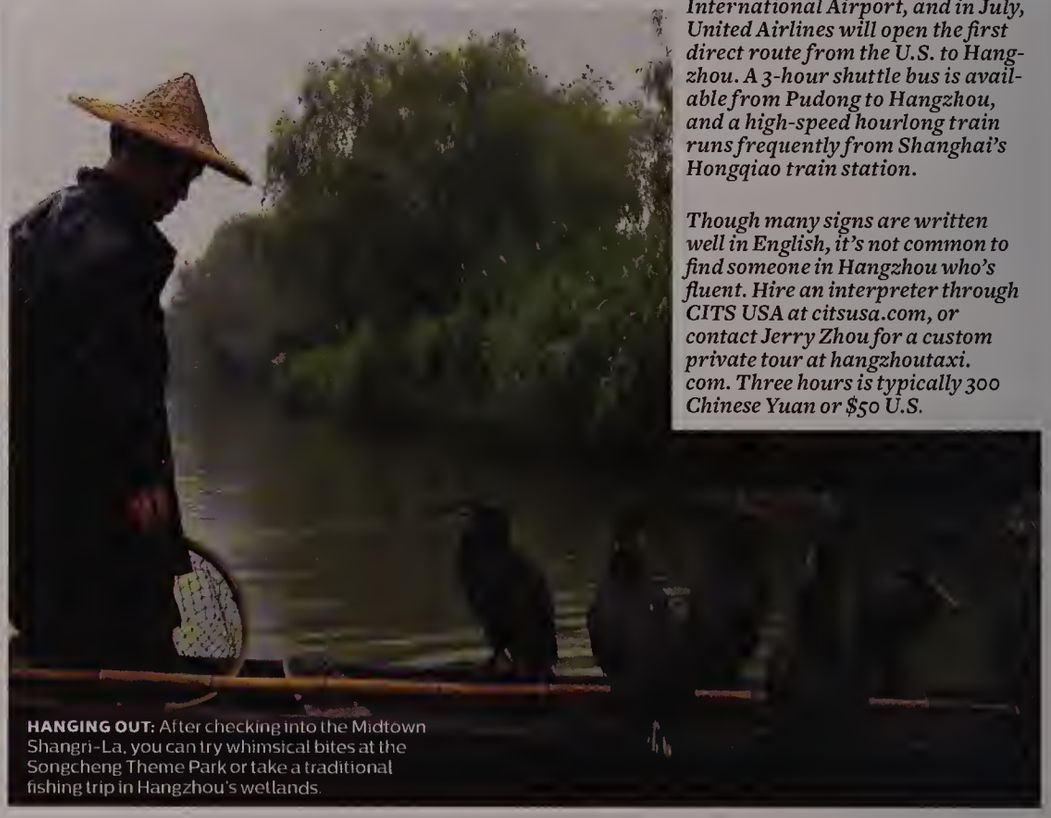
Published by HarperCollins, $28, 368 pages

HOW IRONIC IT IS WHEN KIDS FROM one family or neighborhood diverge dramatically as adults. Kevin is a star at school and in baseball who travels those significant few miles, in an upwardly mobile swoop, from his rough neighborhood in Brighton to the headquarters of The Boston Globe, where he eventually becomes a Pulitzer-winning crime reporter. His sisters Bridget and Colleen are left behind, as is his friend Bobby, tortured and angry, who becomes a reckless and rich bookie. But Kevin and Bobby are joined by a fateful act of violence: At age 15, Kevin set out to kill the man who allegedly murdered his grandmother, but Bobby pulled the trigger first. Guilt sizzles for decades as they lead their different lives, until Bobby becomes a suspect in a series of murders that dredge up their painful past and demand reconnection.



Boston-bred scribe Michael Harvey writes with energetic cynicism, enlivening the Brightonites' criminal schemes and trashy talk. Yet his style also has a kind of breezy wit. His portrayal of Kevin contrasts the character's left-behind local life and attitude with his new style as an educated, successful journalist dating a sophisticated lawyer. Back home after decades, his two selves become dangerously connected as the reporter finds himself entwined in the story. And Bobby's own complexity reveals an underlying strand of loyalty and protection, one of the novel's many surprises.

FROM PAGE 320: The puckered scar ran in a thick diagonal across her back, from left shoulder to right hip. Bridget twisted in the mirror and traced it with her eye. They'd burned her that winter—the winter of her tenth year—with a pot of hot coffee. She remembered it, black and scalding, a waterfall of pain that beat her to the floor where she curled up in a ball and screamed inside her head, never offering more than a mutter for public consumption. ◆

HANGING OUT: After checking into the Midtown Shangri-La, you can try whimsical bites at the Songcheng Theme Park or take a traditional fishing trip in Hangzhou's wetlands.

Traveler's Checks

Hainan Airlines flies directly from Boston to Shanghai's Pudong International Airport, and in July, United Airlines will open the first direct route from the U.S. to Hangzhou. A 3-hour shuttle bus is available from Pudong to Hangzhou, and a high-speed hourlong train runs frequently from Shanghai's Hongqiao train station.

Though many signs are written well in English, it's not common to find someone in Hangzhou who's fluent. Hire an interpreter through CITS USA at citsusa.com, or contact Jerry Zhou for a custom private tour at hangzhoutaxi.com. Three hours is typically 300 Chinese Yuan or $50 U.S.

CHINA MOON

BOSTON'S SISTER CITY HANGZHOU KEEPS IT GREEN AND CLEAN.

"How fortuitous" exclaims driver and interpreter extraordinaire Jerry Zhou when he meets visitors from Boston, a sister city of his hometown of Hangzhou, China. The self-titled "grassroots ambassador" of this metropolis of 7 million was chosen with his family to represent China on a 2015 cultural exchange tour that brought him to some European capitals as well as New York and Boston, but he says the last was his favorite.

Zhou's cheerful tours start from the top, beginning with a bird's-eye view of Hangzhou from the high point of Jade Emperor Hill. In contrast to much of the country, there's minimal smog and urban sprawl, and the remarkable panorama juxtaposes a cosmopolitan skyline with a Taoist crop octagon. Below is a bustling city that's exploded thanks to tech giant Alibaba, but on the hill the quiet is broken only by the sound of people shuffling mahjong tiles nearby and the clop of donkey hoofs carrying supplies to a temple at the top.

Want to experience Hangzhou's answer to Boston Public Garden? Zhou's tour includes a drive along the city's pride and joy, West Lake, a glittering jewel with a winding wooden promenade and lush pathways that make for a green and serene landscape in the heart of downtown. With poetic names like "Autumn Moon Over the Calm Lake" and "Orioles Singing in the Willows," the myriad temples, pagodas and gardens have been the muses of artists for centuries, earning Hangzhou the dreamy city slogan of "Living Poetry." Romance and lotus blossoms welcome throngs of nationals honeymooning here.

Zhou recommends one of the many lake cruises on traditional crafts before recalling his moment of glory as the guest driver of a Duck Boat in Boston, an adventure capped off by a lobster feast. Seafood is also a staple in Hangzhou, especially when covered with light, sweet vinegary sauce and accompanied by fresh vegetables. One of the best places to get a taste is at the Hangzhou Cuisine Museum, an exhibition and dining space that details this region's food history. The food is fresh and flavorful, and lazy Susans swing freely even when teeming with steamed buns, crunchy ginseng, savory lotus root and kiwi dessert dumplings garnished with local tea leaves.

You can also try your hand at catching your own lunch—and enjoy a scenic boat ride of another variety—on a tour of Xixi National Wetland Park, featuring 4.4 square miles designated as a conservation area in 2003. Sit back and admire the lily pads while a fisherman paddles your boat and another casts a net. Using traditional methods, they also get some help from cormorants who catch fish that are then wrestled from the birds' grip. The whole fillet is then artfully prepared with red peppers for your table at the on-site restaurant.

Another fun culinary experience is a tea tasting at the National Tea Museum, dedicated to a source of fierce local pride: Longjing, also known as Dragonwell. Want to know how to get more pep in your step? Detoxify? Reduce blood pressure? The health benefits, best brewing temperatures and the art of pouring a traditional tea service are all detailed and sampled here. Don't miss the view of the misty surrounding tea plantations and West Lake from the top of the mountain.

For true relaxation, check into the Midtown Shangri-La, the city's second hotel in this luxury chain and its newest at just four months old. A Horizon Club room not only offers complimentary breakfast, beverages and an evening cocktail service with a snack spread, but as its name implies, a lovely lake view from the top floor of a city with relatively few skyscrapers. After a day's explorations, unwind in the CHI spa or raise a glass at Midtown Brewery on the first floor, where brewmaster Josh Staines is contributing to the meteoric growth of craft beer in China with eight excellent signature varieties named for local landmarks.

Those landmarks are all subject to change in the coming months as a litany of construction projects wrap up in preparation for Hangzhou to host the G20 Summit this September. The gathered leaders will be focusing on our financial future in a city where one of the most popular attractions, Songcheng Theme Park, looks to the past, with period costumes, foods, handcraft markets and workshops meant to evoke the Song Dynasty. It's an admittedly cheesy but uniquely endearing way to glimpse a way of life that inspired explorer Marco Polo to call Hangzhou the "City of Heaven." Nearly eight centuries later, this sister city still feels like an undiscovered gem. ◆

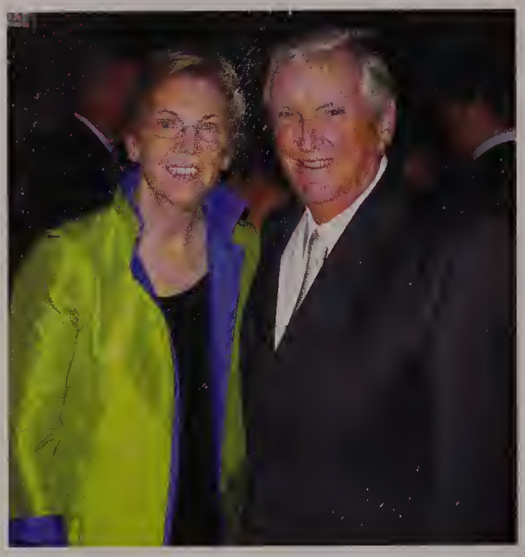
BAR MEZZANA WINNINGLY EVOKES THE ITALIAN SEASIDE IN THE NEW SOUTH END.

IF YOU STOOD AT THE NORTHEAST CORNER OF the South End in 2012, you'd have beheld a foreboding industrial wasteland centered on the abandoned headquarters of The Boston Herald, recently fled in favor of the newly bustling Seaport; you wouldn't want to linger. Leap forward four years, and that once-benighted stretch is now home to Ink Block, a massive complex of gleamingly modern luxury condos, apartments, retail and restaurants. Just as Barbara Lynch's BL Gruppo once nudged gentrification along in other corners of the South End with high-end spots like B&G Oysters, a group of top talents from her restaurants have banded together to open Bar Mezzana, a swank, modern Italian restaurant specializing in seafood raw and cooked.

Chef Colin Lynch (ex-Menton) showcases his well-honed talents with a roster of crudo combining impeccably fresh, precisely chilled seafood, the delicate knifework of Japanese sashimi chefs, Mediterranean flavors of exquisite olive oil, citrus and vinegar acids, and a gardenful of daintily applied herbal, vegetal and fruity accents. For instance, wahoo ($12), white, slightly fatty and mild, is gently combined with slices of cucumber, a whiff of chili and nutty sesame seeds. Pink, firm, sweet-fleshed kingfish ($12) gets a shower of crisp, tart green apple strips and pungent perilla leaves. Salmon ($12), cut into large chunks that show off its gorgeous marbling, is dotted with a piquant green-chili salsa verde, focusing the attention almost entirely on its luscious texture. Firm, assertive mackerel ($10) get more aggressive complements of radish and ginger vinaigrette. Langoustine ($29) gets the soigné raiment befitting a tiny, perfect little lobster: a beady-eyed head poking out of a mound of crushed ice between two tails topped with luxurious dollops of black caviar, just touched with faint accents of pink peppercorn and lime. Each of these few pricey bites is a heady high-wire act, a marvel of balance in textures, temperature and flavors.

All that expensive delicacy can use the robust, modest counterweight offered by crostini, like the seaside-breakfast combination of radish, butter and white anchovy ($10), or the cocktail-hour canapé comfort of chicken liver topped with thick bacon and balsamic-glazed onion ($8). Heads will turn at the bone marrow crostino ($8), a Flintstonesque mammoth loaded with barely cooked marrow, complemented with the bright, sweet fruitiness of Castelvetrano olive pesto. Generous appetizers center on salads with brilliant produce, like a popping-fresh pea salad ($12) with a few shavings of ricotta salata, and an astonishing (for July) tomato salad ($14) of great local cherry tomatoes, creamy dollops of stracciatella and crisp cucumber and nectarine. Grilled octopus ($16) offers a meatier salad, abundant pole beans and potatoes adding heft to just-chewy, barely charred octopus slices.



Pastas come in appropriately modest portions and wisely let a few key flavors speak. Spaghetti with crab, sea urchin and chili ($22) highlights its rich crabmeat and delicately briny uni, while sweetbread cappellacci ($18) ably counterweight their puddingish, vaguely livery filling with syrupy aged balsamic and crunchy leaves of fried sage. Spaghetti cacio e pepe ($17) doesn't hit that elusive Roman ideal of sticking-out-all-over-the-plate underdoneness, but packs the punch of great salty romano. The stunning paccheri ($20) with lobster in a thin tomato sauce based on superb lobster stock may contain a stick of butter: It's like a Connecticut-style lobster roll with pasta subbing for bread. Entrees include an eminently simple, barely crisped, perfectly cooked thick fillet of fluke ($24) served with an herby aioli, and fried rabbit ($24) with chili mayo and lemon to pierce the savory load of a thick batter coating and a smashing fry job. Desserts can feel like an afterthought, though mild gelati and sorbetti ($3) are pleasant enough.

Reflecting beverage director Ryan Lotz's experience at No. 9, Mezzana brings what is now the craft cocktail program to beat in the South End, with a battery of exactingly made specialty cocktails (all $11) like the refreshing, surprisingly funky Italian 75 of grappa, limoncello, chestnut honey and sparkling wine, and the tropical fruitiness of the 'I'iwi Bird ($11) of spiced gin, Aperol, passionfruit and lime. It's about time the neighborhood had an accomplished, well-trained bar staff that knows its way equally around raw-egg cocktails and attentive food service. The wine list is nicely versatile, with a mostly Italian by-the-glass list ($9-$16) and a bottle list that mines familiar Old World locales, throws in a few exotic sources and is helpfully organized by easily recognizable varietal characteristics (e.g., "sorta like pinot grigio"). The 70 bottles ($40-$200) run mostly under $60 in white and pink, mostly under $90 in red. GM Heather Lynch (ex-Sportello) has done a worthy job keeping her front-of-house staff as literate on this score as they are in helping diners navigate the finer points of crudo. The dining room is a marvel: soaring ceilings and windows, white subway tile and ceiling beams, seaside tones of blond woods and cerulean fabrics, fluffy-cloud chandeliers high overhead. With 86 seats in the dining room and 38 in the bar, plus a wide-open kitchen in the center, the room is lively without crossing the painful-noise threshold. The 34-seat patio will be more attractive when the neighborhood becomes less of a construction zone.

In the end, that time traveler from 2012 might gawk at Bar Mezzana and its suddenly swank South End environs. Then again, a bunch of seasoned Gruppo veterans going out on their own, doing a glamorous rendition of a beloved European cuisine, lacquering it with highly polished service and a top-shelf cocktail and wine program, and charging prices appropriate to the neighborhood's new vibe? Maybe we should have seen that coming. ◆

Q: WHAT IS YOUR FAVORITE SUNSCREEN?

A: All of the seven SkinHealth sunscreens! I have a sunscreen "wardrobe" and choose one for the day depending on my activities and the weather. At SkinHealth we have created a variety of sunscreens that have a high SPF and contain between 5% to 17% zinc oxide, which deflects damaging UVA rays. These are invisible on the skin, water resistant, and unlike many other sunscreens, contain no fragrance and are not greasy. Our sunscreen has been selected by Health Magazine as the best in the country!

I founded SkinHealth in 1999 as a result of my sister dying of melanoma, the most deadly form of skin cancer, at the age of 40. My goal is to help prevent melanoma deaths by providing the best sun protection possible.

WOODEN ALLEN

BEAUTIFUL BUT PREDICTABLE, THE DIRECTOR'S LATEST IS A MELANCHOLY, MINOR WORK.

Woody Allen narrates his 47th feature as a writer and director, and for the first time, he sounds labored and drawn, as if every one of his 80 years has caught up with him. It does come as a bit of a shock to hear his voice sound so sluggish, even if we've grown to accept that Allen's writing and directing for his late-period films will more often than not remain fatigued.

But while his writing in Café Society offers few new insights, another shock is that his direction isn't nearly as lethargic as it has been. Working for the first time with legendary cinematographer Vittorio Storaro (a three-time Oscar winner for Apocalypse Now, Reds and The Last Emperor) seems to have energized Allen; there's near-constant movement as he pushes in on his actors, sometimes deploying atypical close-ups for punctuation that may surprise longtime viewers of the director's work. Also notable, Allen and the 76-year-old Storaro are both shooting in a digital format for the first time in their careers, and the resulting visuals are some of the most gorgeous that either artist has ever deployed.

This is clear from the opening frames, which are captured at dusk around the large outdoor swimming pool of a Hollywood estate. Nearly everything is sun-kissed, including the dapper tuxedos worn by the men who sip martinis and the elegant dresses draped on the wives and mistresses who cling to their arms and hang on their words. But for all the golden hues on display, there's also a surprising lack of another familiar glow—that of today's ubiquitous smartphone screens. As if the sheer elegance of the guests weren't enough of a tipoff, the old-fashioned rotary phone that is carried, cord and all, to Phil Stern (Steve Carell), the party's host and influential talent agent, is yet another indicator that we've entered a different era.

Allen has set his latest, not fully realized morality tale in the 1930s, and the call Phil takes isn't the expected one from Ginger Rogers, but an unwanted one from his older sister, Rose (Jeannie Berlin), who's phoning from Brooklyn, but may as well be calling in from Allen's 1987 comedy, Radio Days, another period piece steeped in nostalgia. Rose informs her distracted brother that her youngest son, Bobby (Jesse Eisenberg), is en route to LA, and she needs Phil to help find work for his smart but neurotic young nebbish of a nephew.

[Allen] sounds labored and drawn, as if every one of his 80 years has caught up with him.

That's right: Allen may not appear onscreen in Café Society, but Eisenberg plays Bobby as another in a long line of Allen surrogates who have fallen into the trap of emulating the sometime-actor's more apparent mannerisms and vocal inflections—at least during the film's first half, when Bobby is contrasted as the flip side of "Uncle Phil," who's nothing if not another aspect of the writer/director's personality.

"Stop with the 'Uncle,'" Phil instructs young Bobby when he finally grants a meeting with his nephew after giving the lad the runaround for weeks. "We don't need to publicize the nepotism," he barks before hiring Bobby to assist him as an errand boy, albeit one he'll have little direct contact with. Instead, Phil passes Bobby off on his personal assistant, Vonnie. Kristen Stewart is downright incandescent as the Nebraska transplant who begins by taking the instantly smitten Bobby on a "map of the stars" tour of the Hollywood Hills. Eisenberg and Stewart share an easy rapport no doubt informed by the two films they've already done together (the 2009 gem Adventureland and last year's less successful American Ultra). It carries over into their scenes as Bobby falls hopelessly head over heels with Vonnie, who unfortunately has a boyfriend, an older married man Bobby knows very little about because, well...if you can't see what's coming, you've seen very few Woody Allen films.

Bruce Willis had originally been cast as Phil but left after shooting a few scenes, reportedly due to scheduling conflicts with Broadway's Misery. He may have been better suited to the role than Carell, who never quite projects the confidence and power necessary to make Phil register as anything more than a fraud, and his chemistry in scenes with Stewart suffers for it. But as the lives of our three leads become more intertwined, and Eisenberg's Allen impression begins to cede once Bobby starts to transform into a smooth, morally suspect operator like his uncle, Stewart nevertheless brings out the best in both actors.

Along the way are a few laughs (this is an Allen film), including some courtesy of Corey Stoll in a confident, funny turn as Bobby's gangster brother. But this is a melancholy film in which dreams are dashed and families shattered; the sting of the final third nearly redeems the failings of the first two. The picture ends at a New Year's celebration that echoes the opening pool party, but Bobby will never be the person he was at the beginning. Like Allen though, he'll keep on working, even if his best days are behind him. ◆

OUT OF THE NEST

AN ALT-POP PIONEER REUNITES HER BAND IN THE WAKE OF A COLLABORATIVE OPUS

Tanya Donelly sealed her reputation as an alt-pop goddess by the mid-'90s. She'd co-founded Throwing Muses with Kristin Hersh and the Breeders with the Pixies' Kim Deal. Then she launched Belly, a dreamy rock group that scored the MTV hit "Feed the Tree," headlined a tour with a nascent Radiohead and landed on the cover of Rolling Stone. "That whole experience," she says, "was sort of surreal."

Belly disbanded in 1996 after releasing two albums, and while Donelly released charming solo albums into the new millennium, she's spent much of the last decade off the radar. The Rhode Island native raised two daughters in Arlington with bassist husband Dean Fisher (Juliana Hatfield Three), performing rarely and usually locally. And in addition to singing songs with evocative imagery of birds, bees and babies, Donelly assisted new families as postpartum doula.

"It was still something that I tailored around my parenting, which is the number-one most important thing in my life," Donelly says, acknowledging some similarity between her songwriting and doula counseling. "There's still a lot of creativity in the making of a new nest and helping to bring people through that."

She's shaking up her own nest this summer, however, and busier with music projects than she's been in years. "I don't have a touring life right now—it doesn't fit for me, and I don't miss it," says Donelly, who just turned 50. Nonetheless, she's re-formed Belly for dates in the U.K. and U.S., hitting Royale on Aug. 9 and 12.

"A lot of muscle memory kicked in.... We went from 'never' to 'possibly' to 'OK, let's do it' pretty quickly."

She'll also play a Concert Across America to End Gun Violence benefit at Brighton Music Hall on Sept. 25 with Bill Janovitz and Mike Gent, plus Vapors of Morphine, Hallelujah the Hills and others to be announced. "A sea change needs to happen," she says of gun control. "It seems, at this point, like common sense."

Donelly is also planning another Boston show this fall to celebrate Swan Song Series, a 31-track collection recorded over the last few years and initially released as EPs on her website and Bandcamp. She added bonus songs and issued it on CD in May on Connecticut label American Laundromat, which will release a vinyl version come September.

"I kind of wanted something I could hold in my hands," Donelly says. "At first—and this is so dorky—I was like 'Maybe I'll just make a couple of copies for my kids.' And then I decided if I want to hold it, maybe other people do too."

There's good reason for the album's sprawling size. "It's got my name on it, but it's like a big cooperative," she says of Swan Song Series, its music and lyrics co-written with the likes of Janovitz, Fisher, Robyn Hitchcock, Will Dailey, Damon & Naomi, Magnetic Fields' Claudia Gonson, Belly's Tom Gorman and author Rick Moody. Most of them also perform on the project, as do Throwing Muses' David Narcizo and Belly's Gail Greenwood. Musically, styles range from the country lope of "Mass. Ave." and the piano cabaret of "Let Fall the Sky" to the submerged electronic drift of "Flying at Night" and the hard-rocking "Tu Y Yo."

"The exercise for me was writing with all these extremely different writers and sort of challenging myself to see how I could fit into that," Donelly says. As for the Swan Song moniker, she adds, "It's 99 percent likely that it's the last thing I release in my name... I'm more interested in collaborating from this point on."

Her work with Gorman (whose brother Chris rounds out Belly) and Greenwood "sort of tilled the soil" for reuniting their former band, as did Donelly's positive experience lending cameos to a 2014 Throwing Muses reunion tour.

"A lot of muscle memory kicked in,'" Donelly says of the Belly reunion, which includes new material to tuck alongside old songs live. "We went from 'never' to 'possibly' to 'OK, let's do it' pretty quickly," she says. "We're in a space where we can put our businesses on hold temporarily. Our kids are old enough for us to leave for a short stint. And Chris Gorman actually said, 'It's now or never.' There's going to be a point where no one's going to care." ◆

VIDEO GAMING MAY BE BEST LEFT ON THE COUCH AND OFF THE STREETS

One night a couple weeks ago, my 13-year-old niece explained the fundamental concept of Pokémon Go—you use your phone to hunt for imaginary Japanese animals out in the real world, scoring points when you find them. I replied, "Be careful not to chase a Pokémon that's inside a windowless van." Indeed, Pokémon-based mayhem soon unfolded as the virtual world collided with the real one. People are driving into trees, falling off cliffs and finding dead bodies in the woods, all in pursuit of Nintendo's imaginary monsters. When my friend Louis opined that this whole situation sounds really dumb, my niece told him he just doesn't understand it. "Oh, I understand it," he said. "I just don't get it."

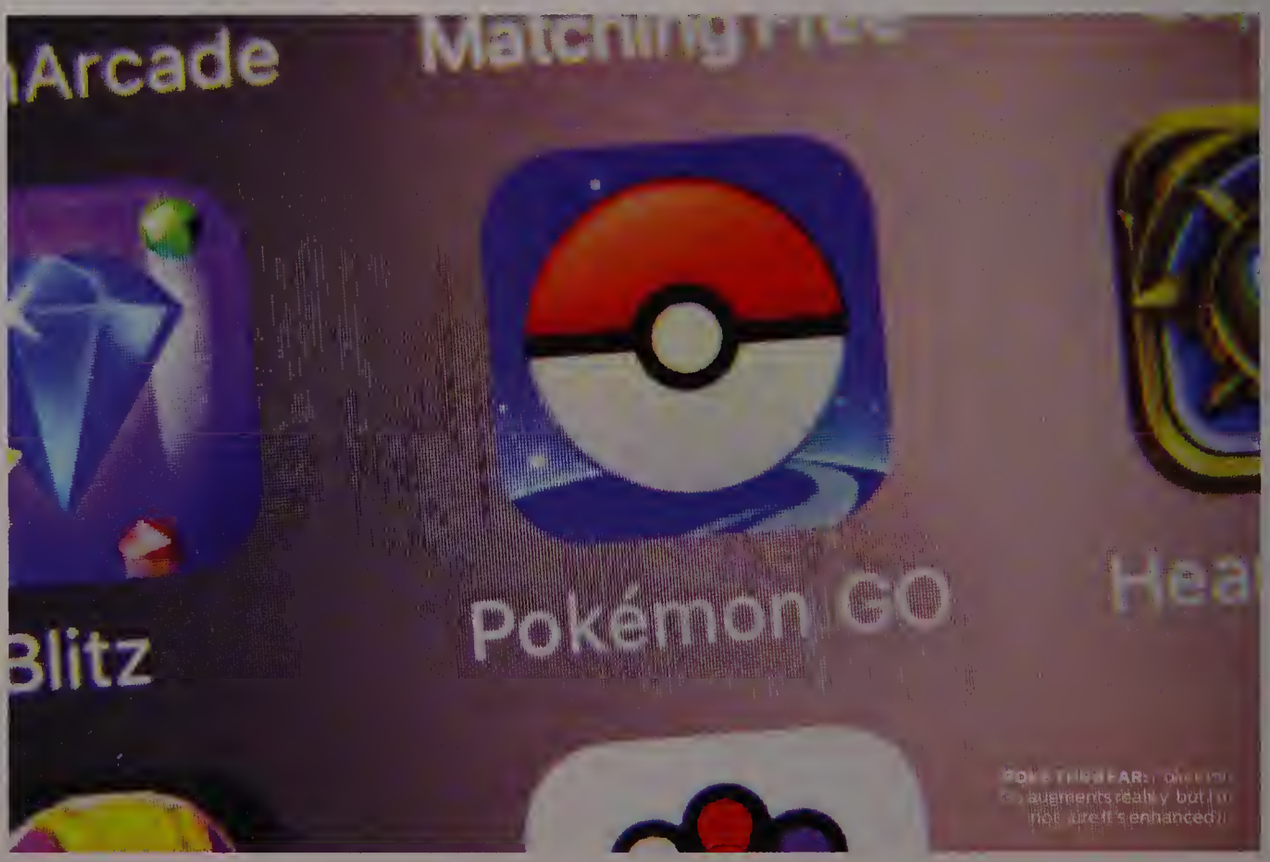
Neither do I, so I download the app and create a Pokémon avatar. I name it JamesKPolkYMon, after our nation's 11th president, who added 800,000 square miles to the United States during his single term. He also died of cholera three months after he retired, which was pretty punk rock of him. Talk about a mic drop.

I can't even begin to catalog the bewildering web of strictures that govern Pokémon Go, but the main idea is that you need to physically perambulate from place to place in order to advance in the game. So I fire up my phone while walking my dogs. Within 100 yards, a rat-like cartoon creature appears on the map, and I switch the view to augmented reality mode. This is the part that everybody loves. Instead of a video-game map, it's my street in front of me, viewed through the camera. Except my boring Pokémon-free world now includes a fictional purple animal who's hopping around and beckoning me to catch him, which I accomplish by throwing red balls at him.

The idea is to assemble a menagerie of these things and then, uh... I don't know. I'm only a Level 3, so I'm still not allowed to train them at a gym. Yes, your goal is to eventually take your imaginary animals to an imaginary gym. Why? I don't know. I have a hard enough time taking my real body to the real gym, so it'll be a while before my hierarchy of priorities includes worrying about whether my Pokémon have unhealthy BMIs.

Still, I do enjoy catching them. The problem is that the game's logic doesn't care about property lines or toxic waste dumps or active firing ranges. It's going to place its Pokémon wherever it sees fit, which is how I find myself wandering my neighbor's front yard in pursuit of an Oddish. There I am, furtively hunched over my phone, glancing up at his house and hoping nobody's home, when it occurs to me that I'm being a huge idiot. Here I am, a grown man, trespassing in a neighbor's yard so I can play a video game. What am I doing? I should go downtown. There'll be lots more Pokémon there.

My wife is pulling in as I'm leaving, so I tell her I'm going to get a coffee, which sounds saner than saying I'm heading out to play Pokémon. She would like a coffee too. Great: How am I going to carry two coffees while catching Pokémon? It's pretty inconsiderate of her to put me in this position, but I decide to compromise (with myself) by parking several blocks away from the coffee place. That'll give me time to do some hunting.



When I get out of the car, it's like I've stepped into some Stephen King town where everything is just a little bit off. Everyone is playing Pokémon Go. Cars are stopping in strange places—a guy in a Durango ignores 10 empty spaces and pulls up right in front of a fire hydrant, which I see on my phone is the location for a gym. "Look at that freakin' guy," I think. "He must be a Level 5. So cool."

A group of people dressed as Santa's elves walk past, staring at their phones. An oncoming Corvette swerves way out of its lane. A guy abruptly stops on the sidewalk, points his phone toward a parked car and starts manically jabbing the screen. And that guy is me. There's an Exeggcute sitting in that Honda CR-V, and I definitely want that for my Pokédex.

As crude as it is, Pokémon Go confirms our hunger for a virtual world that overlaps and enhances our real one, where fanciful digital hallucinations are a norm rather than a novelty. I give it another two weeks until we're all sick of it. I'm more excited about Nintendo's announcement that it's releasing a mini version of the original Nintendo Entertainment System, which will revive the magical worlds of Super Mario Bros., Double Dragon, Excitebike and 27 other games. Just like the original NES, those virtual worlds will be accessible exclusively from my couch. Right where they belong. ◆

WICKED TALENTED

THE BROADWAY ACTRESS SINGS HER CO-STARS' PRAISES AND SOUNDS OFF ON HER OPERA FAVES

TONY-NOMINATED BROADWAY AND TELEVISION actress Megan Hilty, 35, was born and raised in Bellevue, Washington, and studied acting at Carnegie Mellon School of Drama. She made her Broadway debut as Glinda in Wicked, played Doralee Rhodes in 9 to 5: The Musical and this year was nominated for a Tony for her role in the Broadway revival of Noises Off. On television, she was best known as Ivy Lynn on the musical-drama series Smash. On Aug. 6, she will perform with the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra on the lawn at Castle Hill in Ipswich as part of the Trustees of Reservations' 125th anniversary celebration.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Were you always a Broadway baby?
MEGAN HILTY: No. I started out wanting to be an opera singer. But then I kinda quickly turned into a Broadway baby.

You never had the long period of struggle that most actors have, landing Wicked right out of school. Well, my period of struggle came before college. I took two years off before I went to college and worked every awful job you could imagine to support my theater habit at night.

Worst job? There was one place I worked in retail, where they had cameras, not for security purposes but to monitor the employees. They weren't looking for shoplifters. They were looking for reasons to bust us for stupid things. It was really awful.

Actor you sometimes get mistaken for? Any blond actress. I get that all the time. But the worst is when people say, "I know you! What do I know you from?" And they expect you to rattle off your credits, and when you do, if you fall for it, they're like, "No, that's not it. Nope." To make it even worse.

All-time acting idol? I'd pick Bernadette Peters.

And she played your mother on Smash. Were you intimidated to work with her? Absolutely. I still am. She is the sweetest person in the world, and she's one of the few people I get really weird around. I just can't handle it. She's so amazing.

How close was Smash to the reality of doing a Broadway musical? It wasn't far. Of course, there were things that were a little far-fetched, but a lot of crazy stuff happens when you get a bunch of big personalities together to create something. Someone wrote an article this year about 10 things that actually happened on Broadway that if they'd happened on Smash, people wouldn't buy it.

Three adjectives to describe the way you felt when your feet first hit the stage on Broadway. When I debuted? Terrified. Excited. And nervous.

What's your favorite venue to perform in? I don't know. It's getting harder and harder these days, because the audiences are on their cellphones, or bringing their dinners to the show, so it's becoming that more and more my favorite places to perform are the concerts that I do, whether they're with symphony orchestras or with my band.

So you must be super excited about your show at Castle Hill. Oh, my gosh, yes! That's going to be incredible. Goodness gracious, it's so beautiful. I'm so excited.

What is the show you wish you had been in? I don't know. The show I'd love to do is Sweeney Todd, but I feel like I still have time to do that. I guess I'd say Lost or Game of Thrones. Those are my two TV obsessions.

"I hope I will always be like a wide-eyed kid... When I'm surrounded by people that I admire, I think I maintain that sense of wonder."

Do you still sing opera? Every once in a while, I will train with a vocal coach who trains classically. It's so fun. But I'm just doing exercises. There's no way I'll ever be an opera singer. You train your whole life for that.

And isn't it true that female opera singers' voices change, or that they don't even know what their voice will sound like until around 25? It's actually like 35. That's one reason I wanted to do musical theater instead of opera, because I didn't want to wait around and train and train until I was in my 30s. I couldn't wait that long to start working. I'm 35 now, and I think this is what my voice is going to be for the rest of my life, if I take care of it.

Favorite opera aria? "Quando m'en vo" from La Bohème. I did it in opera camp. [Laughs.] It was with the San Francisco Opera, when I was 16. I just think it's so beautiful and sexy. Singing anything in Italian is better because of the open vowels.

Favorite opera? Elektra. It's a one-act by Richard Strauss, and it's very, very dark and very, very bloody. [Laughs.] I remember seeing it when I was a teenager in Seattle, and I just loved it.

How bummed were you to not to win the Tony this year? Not bummed at all. Are you kidding me? I was just so happy to be there. I knew there was no chance in the world that I was going to win. I'd seen everybody else's performances. I was just thrilled to be listed among all of those great performers.

Who were you planning to thank if you'd had to make an acceptance speech? Everybody. I knew I wasn't going to win, but I did have some kind of idea, just in case. I didn't want to be one of those people who got up and said, "I don't know; I'm totally unprepared!" I was just going to talk about how important the ensemble is, and that was what Noises Off really meant to me: working as a team. And if one of us took home a win, it was because of all of us, not just the cast, but the crew and the creative team and the front of house, the people working the box office, everyone.

Was Shrek the Third the easiest payday you ever had? [Laughs.] Well, just because it was unexpected. I had done the demos for the music, and they just used it. That's how I got my SAG card.

Anyone you can't wait to work with again? Allison Janney. She's the greatest person on the planet. I'm dying to do something with her again.

Fantasy duet partner? I just saw Norm Lewis the other day, and we were talking about how we'd love to do something together. They call him the Golden Voice of Broadway.

What is your spirit animal? [Laughs.] My sprit animal is Melissa McCarthy, because I am obsessed with her. I love her.

Do you still feel like a wide-eyed kid, or do you feel like a seasoned pro at this point? I hope I will always be like a wide-eyed kid. Aspects of the business might have made me just a little bit jaded about certain things, but when I'm surrounded by people that I admire, I think I maintain that sense of wonder. ◆

STRIKING A CHORD

Catch 10 Local Bands Making Waves

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

For local rookies and veteran players alike, a year around Boston's music scene can yield dividends in creativity and popularity, on record and onstage. Our 2016 class of largely female-fronted bands deserves that merit and momentum.

PVRIS

Lynn Gunn kept singing as she seemingly high-fived every fan that security pulled over the stage barricade at Royale during the first of Pvris' two sold-out shows in June. Those headlining gigs marked a milestone for Lowell's dark, electronic rockers, who've built their audience on the undercard.

"We've never really played to a crowd of our own," says the frontwoman of Pvris (pronounced "Paris" but altered to avoid the same spelling as a Lindsey Buckingham side project). "It seems abrupt, like a crazy, drastic change, but it's something that's been building over time as we've been touring and opening up for other bands."

During their four-year rise, Gunn and bandmates Alex Babinski (guitar, keyboards) and Brian MacDonald (bass, keyboards) have gone from playing Rocko's Sports Bar & Grill in Manchester, N.H., to appearing on Jimmy Kimmel Live!, joining last summer's Warped Tour and opening for Fall Out Boy in arenas this winter. But when they released their 2014 debut, White Noise, it took time for the album to carve a path. For starters, the group's dark, punk-edged electro-pop was a departure from the aggressive rock of its early incarnation.

"I'd wanted to incorporate electronic elements for a while," Gunn says. "But the [metal/punk] scene we came from had a very specific, dialed-in sound." She credits White Noise producer Blake Harnage for urging Pvris to break expectations.

The resulting album draws from a dark period after the end of a relationship. Gunn wrote introverted songs with anthemic resolve, from the title track, inspired by the film Poltergeist, to "You and I," a riff on relationship woes that's one of two tracks added to the album's deluxe edition released in April. "When you're depressed, the things that you're feeling and the issues you have, they're not tangible, so they're all invisible," Gunn says. "That's how the whole ghost element came into play."

Now facing larger stages, she notes a very visible transformation when all eyes aim her way. "I'm kind of timid when talking," Gunn says, but when she performs, "Some kind of switch just flips on me, and I'm something completely different."

ABBIE BARRETT

"I was kind of late to the game," Abbie Barrett admits. The New York native, who lived in California for a year before moving to Boston, was singing backup in bands here when she started to write her own songs in her mid-20s.

A decade later, with a trail of club shows and residencies behind her, Barrett is finally enjoying a watershed year. She's ready to release a bracing eight-song EP called That Shame on the heels of her semifinal run in this spring's Rock & Roll Rumble and a 2015 Boston Music Award as Singer-Songwriter of the Year.

"Playing music is one of those things where, when I'm doing it, I feel most like myself—that alone is impetus to keep doing it," she says. "I just wish it was a little more lucrative so I could be doing it more. But at the very least, I'm not losing money on it."

She's lucky to have a streamlined, butt-kicking band that includes guitarist Mike Oram and bassist/producer Ed Valauskas, who also joins Barrett in Jenny Dee & the Deelinquents, where she sings backup. "They're all my friends," she says. "There are so many nice people who play music around this town."

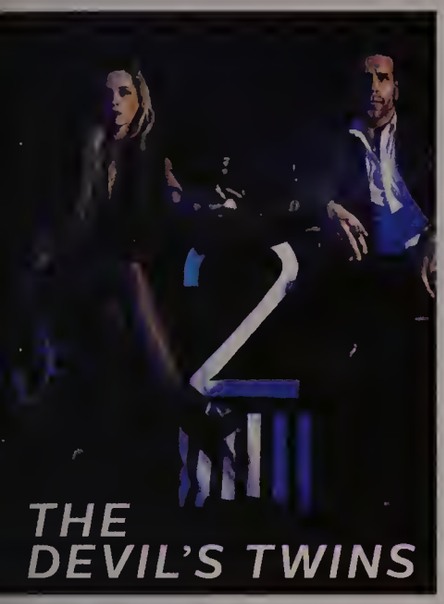
It's a refreshing change for Barrett, who once played in a more folky solo setting. "I sort of hated it," says the singer/guitarist, whose inspirations range from Neil Young to Radiohead. "But I knew in the back of my head that I would do it enough to get a band going."

That Shame showcases her in full rock mode, sometimes evoking the tone and phrasing of the Pretenders' Chrissie Hynde. "I get compared to the Pretenders a lot but don't really listen to them," says Barrett, whose craftsmanship extends from the gorgeous vocals of "As I Wanted You" and the soaring crescendos of "Falling" to the catchy '80s-flavored punch of "Take It in Stride."

In a video for that song, Barrett plays a scientist in a lab of colorful dry ice. "It's that whole music business, how best to get people engaged, and right now we're thinking video is the way to go," she says. "People are more inclined to click on [something] if there's a visual attached. And it's fun to make music videos!"

AND THE KIDS

And The Kids didn't start honing their sound in a standard rehearsal space. Three years ago, the Northampton-based band rented a cheap plot of land on the Connecticut River with an electrical outlet, erected a tent and brought in a storage pod to practice in.



"We had fans in there and kept it open—it was in the shade as well," says singer/guitarist Hannah Mohan. "We were right on the water. You could play drums outside. It was like the dream summer, except for the thunderstorms." That is, Mohan says, until the fire department declared their bucolic setup unsafe.

This summer finds And The Kids touring behind their assured and adventurous second album, Friends Share Lovers. The June release supplements the band's oblique songs—rooted in influences from Yes and the Doors to PJ Harvey—with dream-pop layers capped by high, stacked harmonies.

"I love dream-pop," Mohan says. "It was definitely intentional to do more vocals and experiment more." And The Kids have been artistically restless ever since Mohan met drummer Rebecca Lasaponaro in middle school band class. They dropped out of high school but earned GEDs and later met keyboardist Megan Miller and bassist Taliana Katz at the Institute for the Musical Arts in Goshen.

Katz only joined And The Kids when Miller was deported to her native Canada for overstaying her visa, a situation that likely won't be resolved for a few years. So the group went to Montreal to write and record Friends Share Lovers with Miller's input—and synth parts that Lasaponaro now triggers onstage while Mohan and Katz work with loop pedals to refashion the band's shorthanded sound. "It's crazy, but we keep it together," Mohan says. "We're just gonna pretend we're together."

THE DEVIL'S TWINS

Equally at home in art school or a biker bar, the Devil's Twins take no prisoners. Jeremiah John Louf splits his raw guitar tone into three octaves through separate amps, his cool vocals countered by the banshee cries of his tambourine-wielding sister Nikki Marie Coogan, while Ryan Manning attacks his drum kit like an octopus on steroids, mouthing the siblings' words for animated emphasis.

"We work really well together because we thrive off the controlled chaos," Coogan says of the trio, who share a love for Elvis Presley, Amy Winehouse, Johnny Cash, Social Distortion and the Misfits. "We're not a punk band," Louf says, "but the intensity is at a punk level. If you take Billie Holiday and Buddy Holly and put them together to play these songs, they'd come out like that."

Separated by their parents' divorce, Louf grew up with his mom in Salem while Coogan lived with her dad in Rhode Island. But they reconnected at the Massachusetts College of Art & Design, where they majored in design and illustration. She works as a tattoo artist, which facilitates ink for the band, its crew and fans.

"I'm the only one who can count my tattoos," Louf says. "Instead of a fan base, we call it a friend or family base. It has that syndicate family feel."

The Devil's Twins—named because the siblings were born the same week, two years apart—also bring their visual aesthetic to the stark silhouettes cast by floodlights that Coogan controls onstage. Their self-designed album covers feature three children, looking like the band members in their cool, bad youth.

"What was amazing was when we dressed the kids up in the outfits, they really took it upon themselves to form this union," Louf says, "to the point that the little Nikki and the little me were really tight, and we said, 'Don't leave Ryan out!'"

PALEHOUND

People in a waiting room take therapeutic turns with a sledgehammer in the new video for Palehound's "Cushioned Caging," one of the most entertaining, crisply directed local clips you'll find. And it was done in collaboration with high school students from the Real to Reel Filmschool of Boston nonprofit Raw Art Works.

"It captures the environment of being caged, because waiting rooms are pretty bleak," Palehound singer/guitarist/songwriter Ellen Kempner says. "They did an amazing job. I was shocked. Well, not shocked. I could trust them, but damn!"

Kempner was still a teenager when she wrote "Cushioned Caging" and other songs on 2015's Dry Food, which brought her national indie-rock acclaim and the chance to tour both the U.S. and Europe. In high school, Kempner says, "I was kind of a weirdo... I had some great friends, but I spent a lot of time alone, smoking weed by myself and writing songs."

She began writing at age 10 but didn't think her songs were cool until years later, says Kempner, who also honed nimble guitar chops versed in jazz and classical as well as rock. At 13, when she attended a camp in her native Connecticut, Speedy Ortiz's Sadie Dupuis was her counselor. "I was actually covering Pearl Jam, and she was helping me learn the song," Kempner says.

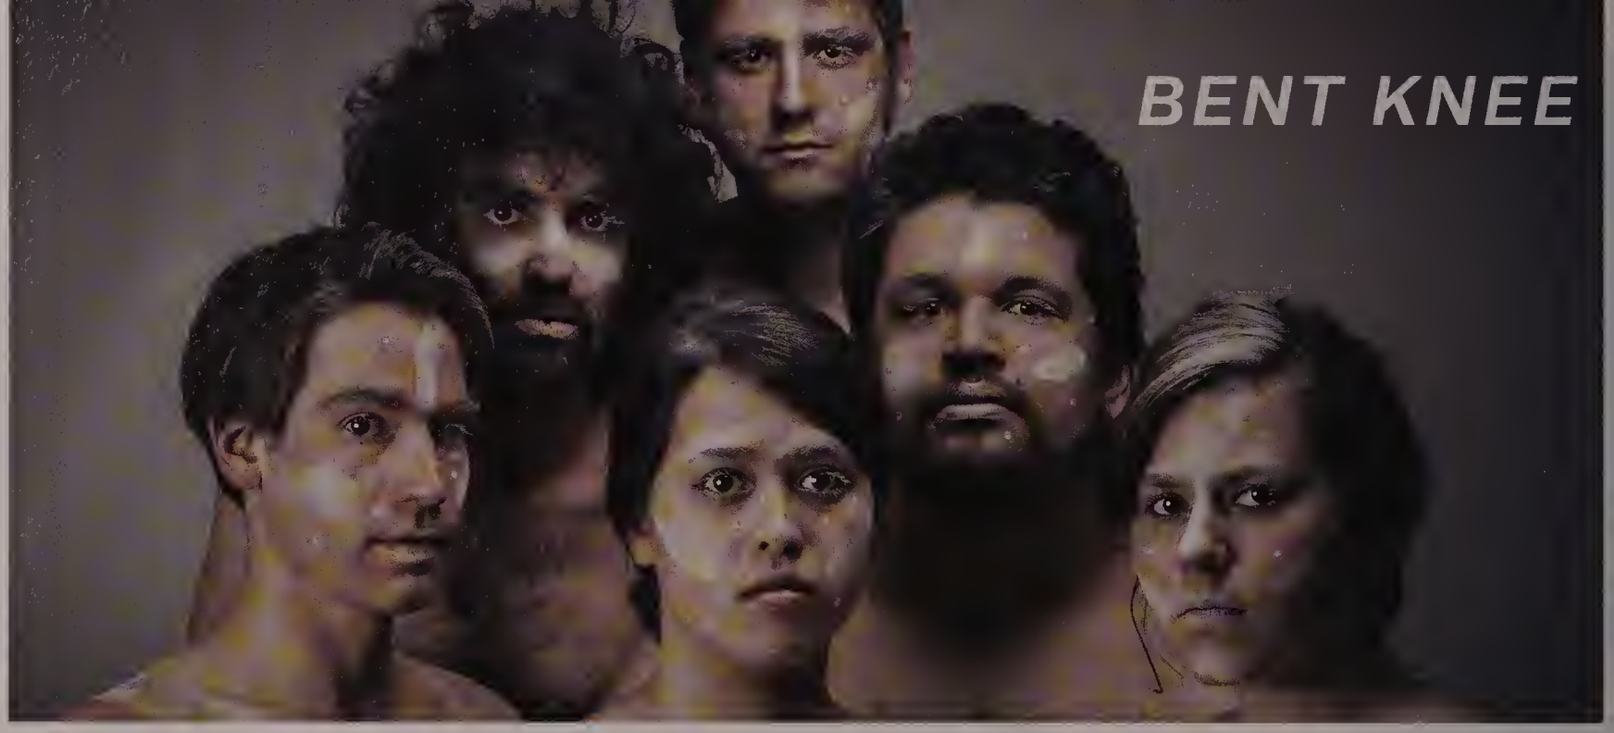
Dry Food reflects her interdisciplinary sensitivity, from chugging rocker "Molly" to jazz-shaded acoustic work, dovetailed by self-aware lyrics that softly reframe the pains of love. And Kempner played every instrument except drums (handled by Jesse Weiss, now part of her live trio completed by bassist David Khostinat). "It would be daunting for me to relinquish that power," she says. "I'm just so neurotic, and I need things to sound exactly like I envision them."

Which makes Kempner a tad uncertain about the follow-up she plans to record this fall. Despite some writer's block, she says the bulk of the writing is done. "I definitely feel good," Kempner says, "but I'm also nervous, obviously because of how well the last record was received. I don't want to let anyone down."

JULIE RHODES

It's the stuff of local folklore. After a Providence house concert, Julie Rhodes was chatting with musicians Jonah Tolchin and Dan Blakeslee, who was trying to remember a tune when Rhodes sang a snatch. Impressed by her voice, Blakeslee challenged her to write a song, and she got to it on the drive back to Somerville.

Until then, Rhodes' only experience with singing had been in the car or the shower. "That's where I got my chops, on road trips by myself, belting it out in the car," says the Woburn native, who'd spent time following pop-punk bands around the country. "I was especially shy back then, so that was my way of living vicariously through these other artists. Then I decided this is what I wanted to do myself."



She emailed Tolchin and Blakeslee that first song and didn't look back. Tolchin produced Rhodes' February debut, Bound to Meet the Devil, an album of earthy country-blues songs that she and/or Tolchin wrote, plus a cover of Son House's "Grinnin' in Your Face." At the forefront is her sweet, sandpapery voice, which brings to mind Etta James, Janis Joplin and Bonnie Raitt, even if Rhodes says her vocal style was influenced more by the progressive reggae-punk band RX Bandits.

"I was never really brought up on soul music or R&B or blues," Rhodes says. "A lot of the vocal stylings were never influenced by those artists, but when [my music] started happening, those artists came to light for me."

It was a similar case when Tolchin arranged to finish the album at Alabama's legendary Muscle Shoals studio, where soul greats such as Aretha Franklin and Wilson Pickett recorded. "It's not something that I ever grew up knowing anything about," Rhodes says. "That [Muscle Shoals] documentary came out as we were trying to figure out a place to record." They even added keyboards by Spooner Oldham at Muscle Shoals, then mixed the album in California with overdubs from session ace Greg Leisz on pedal steel and Sara Watkins (of Nickel Creek) on violin.

Rhodes' long days of working in an ice cream shop are over, as she's gone from cutting her teeth in local rooms like Atwood's Tavern to spending more time on the road with her band. "At first it was a challenge to even get me up on stage," she says. "It went from me being afraid of it to me feeding off the nervous energy."

Then there's that wide-brimmed hat that she favors onstage. "It's like a safety blanket," Rhodes says, "but I do have a love for a nice hat."

Art-rock collective Bent Knee colors a schizophrenic canvas of musical influences and sonic personality. Former Steve Vai disciple Ben Levin balances shredding with squiggly guitar loops and appreciates Kendrick Lamar and Sufjan Stevens. Bassist/singer Jessica Kion admires both Stevens and Tune-Yards. Violinist Chris Baum favors moody Nordic bands Sigur Rós and Efterklang, while drummer Gavin Wallace-Ailsworth draws from Peter Gabriel's polyrhythmic grooves. And sound designer Vince Welch values Nine Inch Nails and Porcupine Tree.

"There's very little overlap in what we listen to as individuals or our musical training or background," says singer/keyboardist Courtney Swain, who grew up in Japan before studying classical composition and voice at Berklee, where she met her bandmates. She cites eclectic Japanese singer Ringo Sheena as her primary inspiration. "I appreciated how different and nonconformist and how dark she is," Swain says, labeling qualities that fit her own band's communal identity.

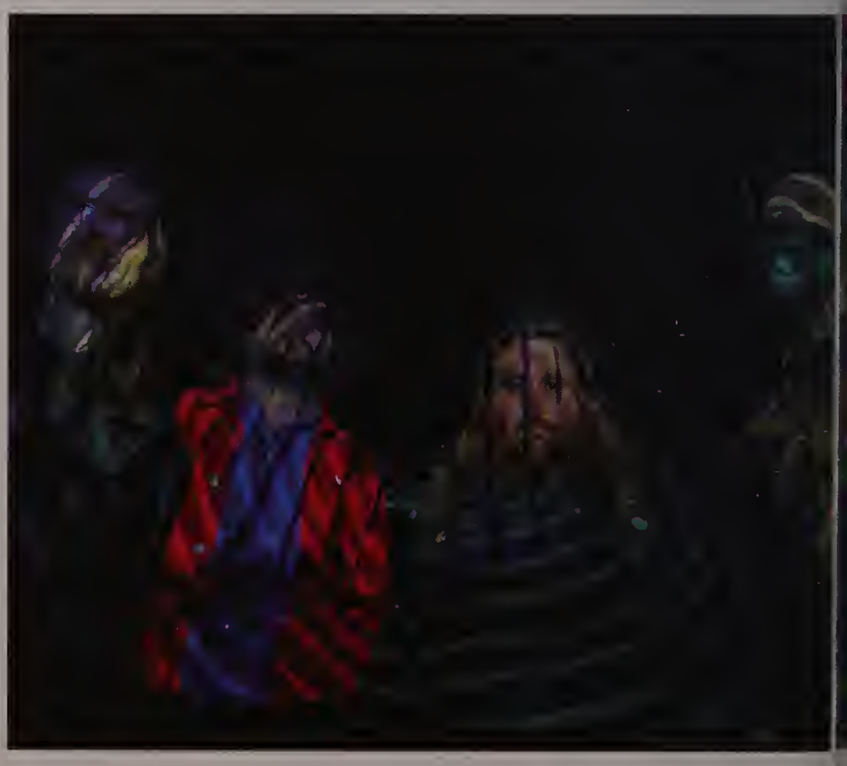
Bent Knee's dynamic third album, Say So, released in May on experimental Maryland label Cuneiform, floats echoes of Far Eastern music (including the grand rhythmic and choral flourishes of "The Things You Love"), but despite her skyscraper voice, Swain doesn't dominate the band's sound. Songwriting is particularly democratic for the sextet, which finalized its membership five years ago.

"We can't create the sound of Bent Knee without everyone's input, so we write by consensus," Swain says. However, Welch gets added say-so when it comes to recording. "The way we write is like sculpting," Swain says, noting they "overwrite and track as much as we can in one [studio] day, and Vince will go and peel through the layers and see what will work."

In turn, Swain anchors Bent Knee's storm, swooping from cabaret calm to gale-whipped summits, but she says, "I feel like a vehicle more than the center of attention. I see my voice as an instrument, and when I emote, I sing as all of us."

WORSHIPPER

Many bands change musicians, but not partway to winning a competition. Heavy rockers Worshipper hit that bump after a first-round victory in April's Rock & Roll Rumble when lead guitarist Alejandro Necochea left for a European commitment with another band. He drafted Craig Small to learn his parts as a sub.



"We really made it a point to just be as relaxed about the whole situation as we could," singer/guitarist John Brookhouse says. "It was definitely more daunting for Craig than us." Especially when the group added songs in later rounds.

Worshipper still emerged triumphant, as one might expect of dark, epic-minded rockers crowned Metal Artist of the Year at December's Boston Music Awards.

Brookhouse says he was seeking something more melodic than his thrash band Rule, while Necochea wanted something heavier than Township in forming their group with bassist Bob Maloney (Cracktorch) and drummer Dave Jarvis (Mellow Bravo).

"Pop and metal weren't that far apart when we were growing up, so people can see those touchstones of things they remember," says Brookstone, citing old-school influences UFO, Rainbow, Judas Priest and Dio-era Black Sabbath. "And we're trying to write songs too. It's not just a bunch of riffs thrown together."

Now Worshipper awaits the Aug. 26 release of their debut album, Shadow Hymns, capped by the distorted bass wah-wah of remixed favorite "Black Corridor." And the eight-song record arrives on New York's Tee Pee label, home to the group's more modern, doomy inspirations, like Sweden's Graveyard. "A lot of bands on there are right in our wheelhouse," Brookhouse says. "It's a cool place to be."

BENT KNEE CHRIS ANDERSON, WORSHIPPER JAMES JAY FORTIN

RADCLYFFE HALL

Clones of Dhy Berry appear on multiple instruments in the video for "Rather Be," from her band Radclyffe Hall's full-length June debut, Ghosts, and that's a lot like the way she works in the studio. "I do 98 percent by myself," says Berry, who starts from the rhythm up. "The bass and drums have to be the most captivating part, because I'm a bass player, so that has to be cool... or it's not going to work."

That makes the results danceable, though it's her surrounding vocal and synth orchestration that truly makes Berry's vision come to life. Her music reminds one of dark synth-pop groups like Depeche Mode, and she counts Toronto dance-pop band Metric and bassist/singer Meshell Ndegeocello among her influences.

But Berry also listened to R&B and funk in her Ohio youth and neo-soul artists like Erykah Badu and D'Angelo in college. She covers Janet Jackson's "Control" on Ghosts, but her R&B side blossoms on the creamy, propulsive "Don't Wait (It's Now or Never)," featuring Raine, aka her onstage vocal/keyboard foil Jaqui Rae Stewart.

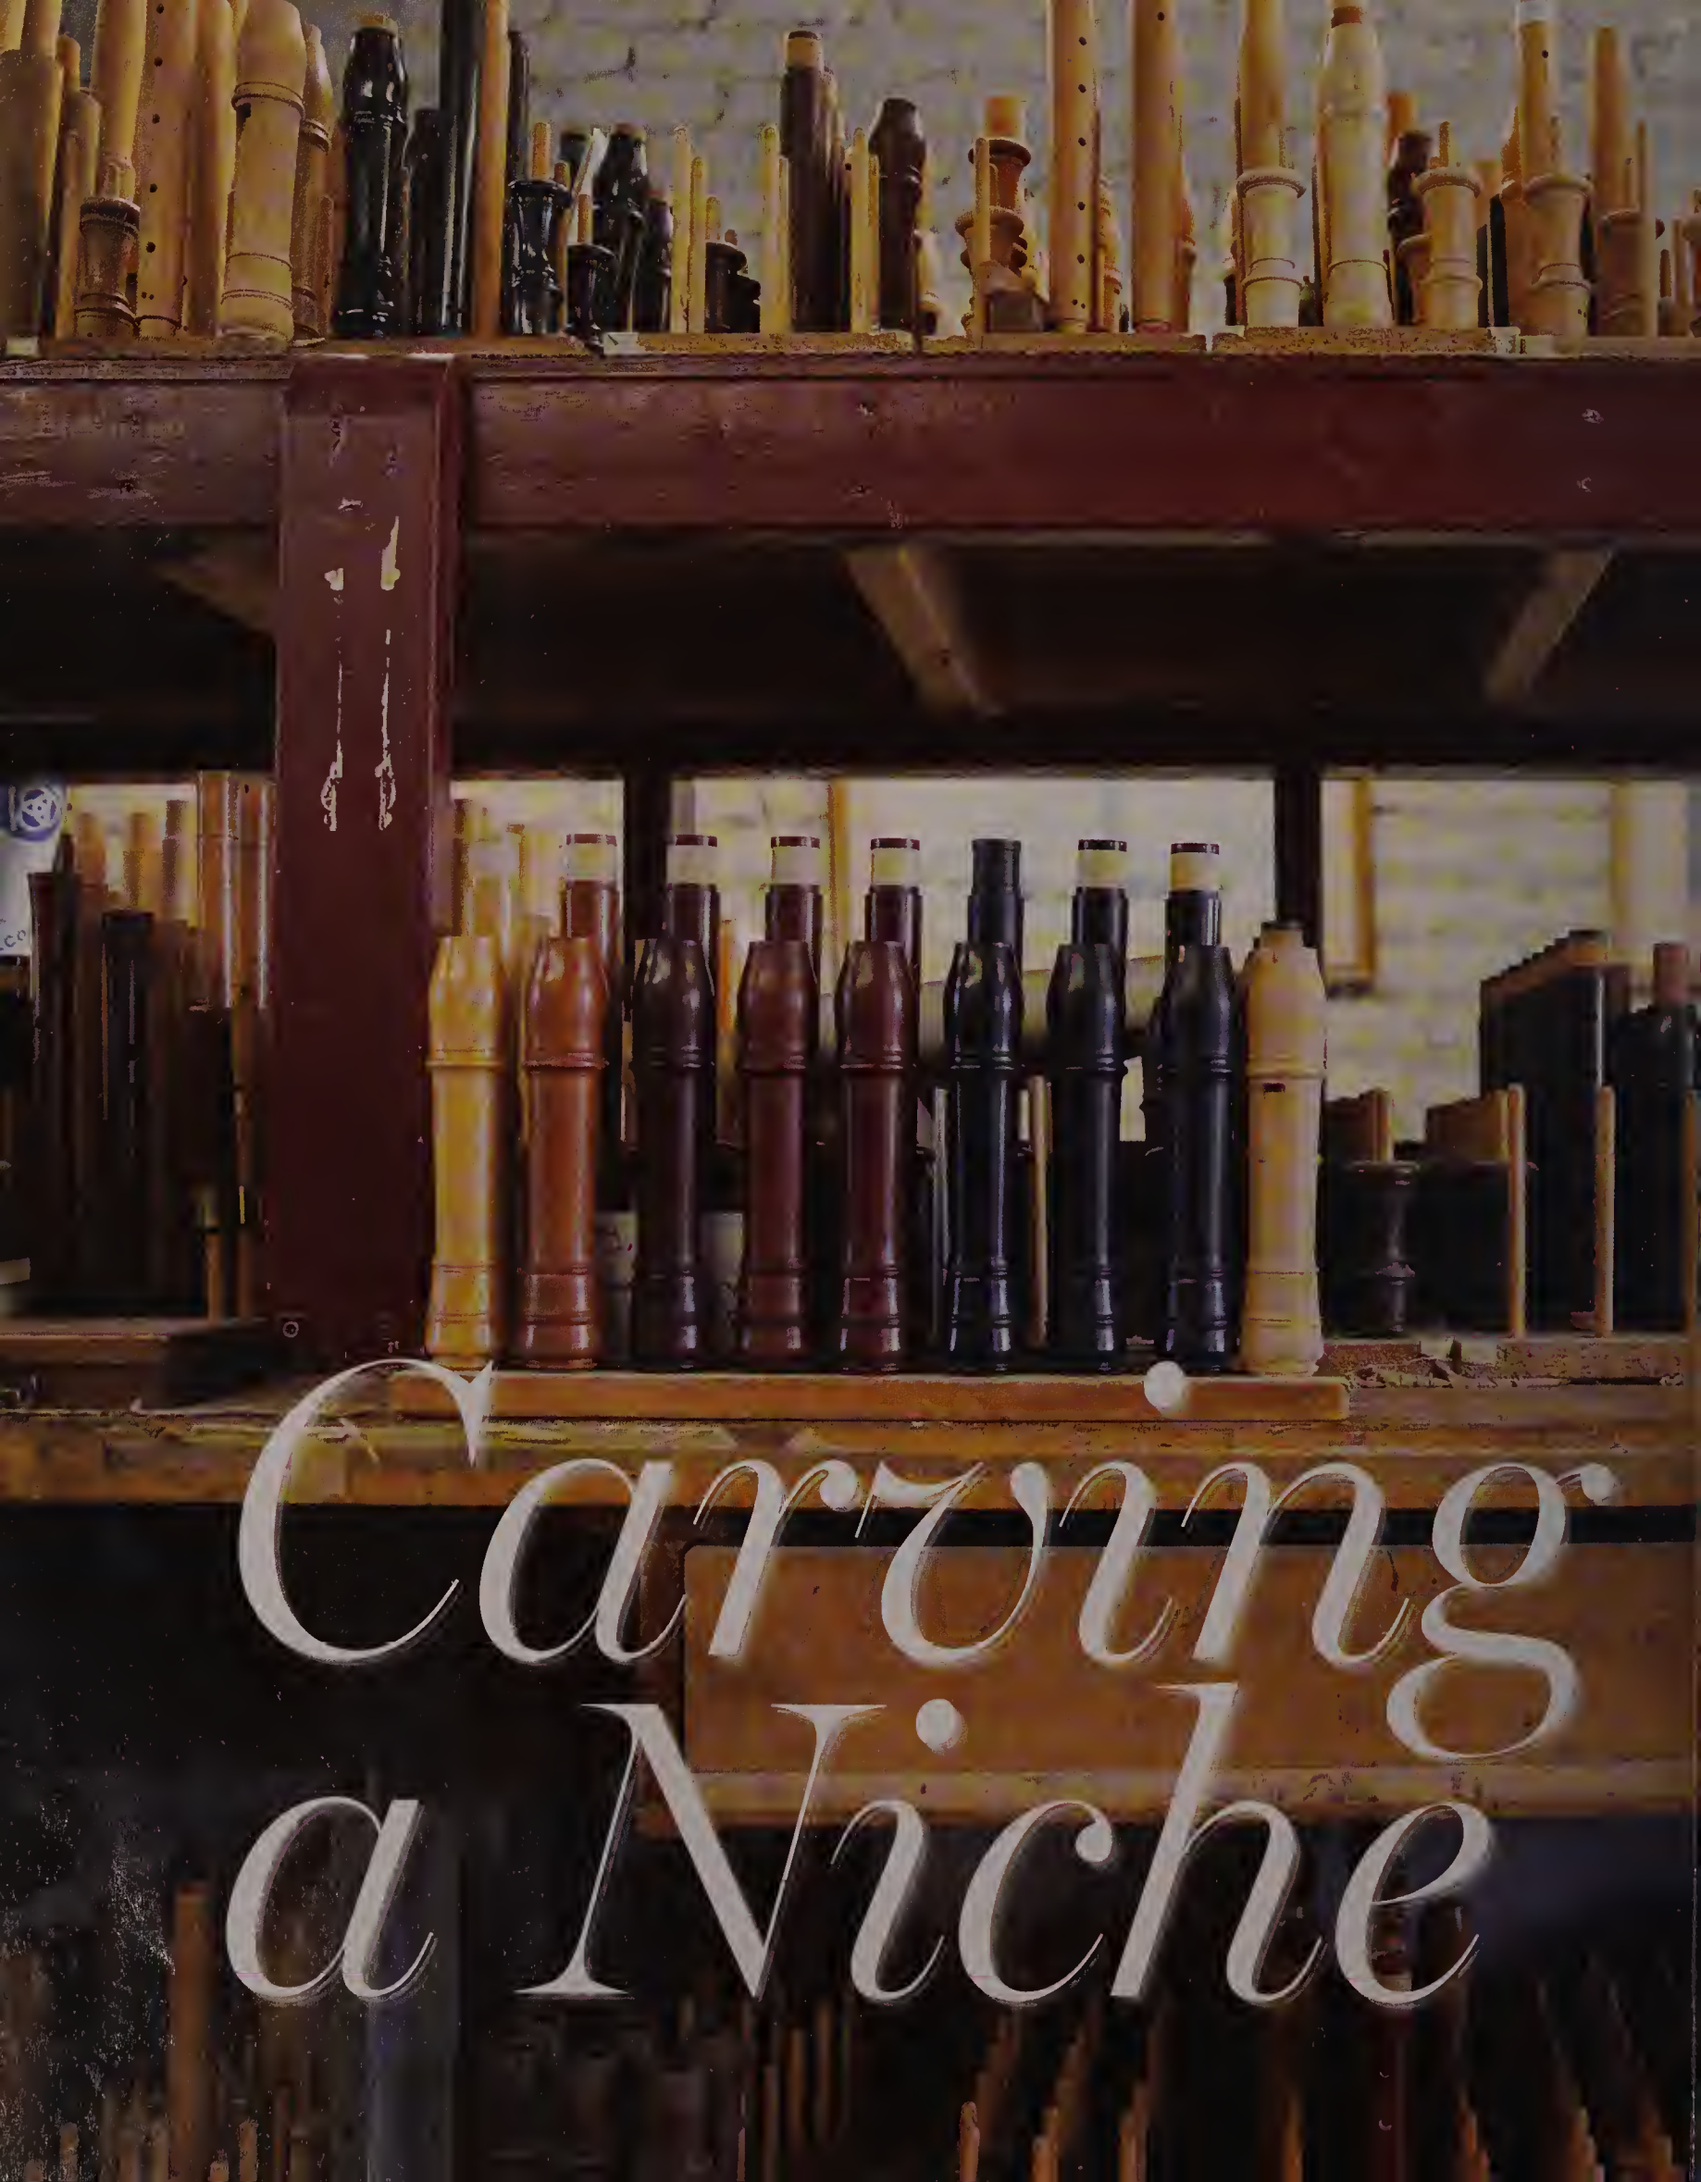
The Berklee graduate launched Radclyffe Hall (named after the English poet who wrote about loneliness and lesbianism) two years ago after extensive touring as a side musician with Canada's the Cliks. "I always wanted to have my own thing," Berry says. She drafted Stewart and two drummers, who would symmetrically face each other on stage, though she recently scaled back to drummer Sean Camargo alone.

Their sound was further stripped down at a recent New York show when Berry's computer got wet and malfunctioned, forcing the trio to eschew their programmed layers—and, Berry says, lending them fresh perspective. "It was cool to hear it sound a little more organic."

THESE WILD PLAINS

When he used to sell T-shirts and manage bands on tour, Ryan Bambery watched musicians teach each other guitar parts before the show. "It stuck with me," he says. "OK, if they can do it this way, I've got nothing to lose."

Learning guitar basics on the side proved helpful when he met up with fellow restaurant staffer Ben Voskeritchian to make music. "We'd just write songs together before we even had a name," Bambery says. "Mean Creek had a big sold-out show at Great Scott, and they said, 'Hey, don't you guys have a band?' We had songs. But they gave us a show, and we had a month to put a band together."



Three years later, These Wild Plains are making strides with their just-released second album, Distant Ways, furthering what co-frontman Bambery calls their "American rock 'n' roll." For his band, that means an Americana-steeped sound that's both rugged and winsome, inspired by My Morning Jacket and the Band.

"We were into the blues when we started, and it wasn't until a year or two in that I got started on a Willie Nelson kick," says Bambery, who turned his love for slide guitar into playing the lap steel. "The whole band just got kicked into the wide world of country, and we haven't turned back since."

Stylistic shifts are par for the course, as drummer Rob Motes and guitarist Nick Mercado also join co-singer/guitarist Voskeritchian in the shoegaze soul-rock outfit Dirty Bangs. "Different roles keep it fresh and interesting," says Voskeritchian, who handles bass in Dirty Bangs, where Mercado switches to keyboards.

But there's no doubting where These Wild Plains are rooted—in more ways than one. "I had a girl from Nashville come up and tell us that [the music] reminded her of home," Bambery says. "I said, 'Good, it reminds me of home too.' But I grew up in Braintree."

Carving a Niche

By MEGHAN KAVANAUGH
Photographed By SARAH SILBIGER

For many of us, the recorder brings to mind shrill renditions of "Hot Cross Buns" best left behind in elementary school.

But the plastic models used by fourth graders are a world away from the expertly carved instruments of the Von Huene Workshop. "Our focus is making handmade instruments that are exceptional," says Patrick von Huene, pausing from work in his family's eponymous Brookline shop, where hundreds of handcrafted wooden recorders in various stages of completion stand at attention on dowels atop shelves and tabletops, waiting to be brought to life by professionals who perform with the likes of Boston Baroque and the Handel and Haydn Society—or enthusiastic amateurs who aren't deterred by prices that start at $1,100.

"You're paying for handwork and attention and the real materials, the real deal," says von Huene, son of the late Friedrich von Huene, a German immigrant who started making recorders in the front hall of his Brookline apartment before setting up shop in 1960 and becoming one of the most sought-after makers of his kind. His instruments found their roots in the craftsmanship of the Baroque and Renaissance eras, when recorders were used to entertain European nobility. At that time, orchestras were smaller, pitches lower, allowing the woodwinds to shine. But long after orchestras became bolstered for larger crowds by instruments like the piano, the von Huene family showcases a special appreciation for the recorder and its history, building a business that, 56 years after its founding, continues to be recognized around the world.

Many of its recorders are, in a sense, centuries in the making: Each European boxwood tree—the same favored by the original makers—takes 300 to 500 years to grow large enough to yield wood for just 10 instruments. (By comparison, a domestic maple generously gifts 100.) Once the wood arrives at the shop, von Huene says he and his employees spend 90 to 120 hours creating a stage-ready recorder, turning the block of boxwood until each of the instrument's three components achieves its desired shape, carefully drilling holes, sanding the wood down with ultrafine paper of up to 2,000 grit and dyeing it (using boxed hair color, no less). Von Huene and colleague Roy Sansom, a professional recorder player whose credits include work with the Boston Pops and Emmanuel Music, then tune each piece, going through four or five rounds of edits during the course of several hours until the instrument meets their own standards and the customer's specific preferences.

"Sounds like a lot," von Huene says, noting that their record output during one particularly productive year was 360 instruments, "but it's the detail.

It's the attention not only to the cosmetics but, most importantly, to the sound and how the instrument plays and responds. It's the difference between a Lamborghini and a Rambler. Both will get you there; it's just one will do it in a little more style."

The von Huene style is one Patrick learned from his father, who died in May at the age of 87. After years of apprenticing and making his own recorders, Friedrich von Huene was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship to study historical woodwinds from around the world, measuring and playing the best instruments from the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries. That knowledge proved useful for mass manufacturers in Europe and Japan, who tapped the elder von Huene's expertise, and for his own designs that have helped pros play the works of Baroque composers like Bach, Handel and Vivaldi on the instruments they intended.

"He took all of the best instruments that were available at the time," von Huene says, "and he came up with his own design, which used the best attributes of the ones that were available and put them together. As a result, he immediately got orders and the most prominent recorder players in this country placed orders. It took off because there was nothing so good as that."

At the same time, the U.S. was experiencing a resurgence of interest in early music. "Boston became the hub of early music performance and teaching in this country," von Huene explains. "It still is, to a degree, the performance mecca of this country, but because of Boston, there are now places in California and in Texas, believe it or not, and in New York that are trying to be what we were in the '60s and '70s and '80s." His father, who founded the Boston Early Music Festival in 1980, at one point established such a reputation for historical accuracy that he had a 10-year waiting list for his instruments.

Today, von Huene continues to strive for that sense of authenticity, though the shop does have a few modern luxuries not afforded to makers in the 1600s: "Sandpaper? They didn't have sandpaper," he points out. "They had shark skin." And he acknowledges that there are certain technological advancements—custom computer-designed steel reamer guides produced by outside companies, for one—that would not only speed the process along, but potentially allow for even more precision. Now standing at the helm of the business, von Huene is cautiously exploring those options, though still looking to keep plenty of distance from the practices of mass producers. "People come up here and they're amazed," he says. " 'Where are the computers?' No, don't need them."

Von Huene left a career as a chef to begin working for the business more than 30 years ago, bringing with him a set of organizational skills not necessarily possessed by his artistic father, who, he admits with a smile, "could be a little chaotic," sometimes heading into the shop in the middle of the night to tinker with a new design. The younger von Huene began with basic woodworking; it would be eight years before he made an instrument from start to finish. "It was at least 10 years until I was comfortable. My dad didn't sit down and direct me per se and hold my hand. I blew a few instruments, which is not a happy thing and doesn't happen often," von Huene recalls. "It takes a while. You can't be a painter like Michelangelo in five years. It takes time and practice and also focus on it."

But the results are lasting, as evidenced by the fact that original designs are still gracing the stage as new orders continue to come in. "I'm getting instruments that were done in the early '60s and even late '50s that are coming back [for maintenance], and people are connected with it viscerally. They're connected. Their soul, their heart, that's why they play music," von Huene says. "[My father] just passed in May, and I'm still getting letters about 'how he touched my life.' My focus is to continue that legacy in a way."

"If you do your job right, you're making the performer happy, and if they're performing for other people, you're making an audience happy."

So he honors traditions and makes them his own. With tools strewn about and yellowing newspaper articles hanging on the walls, von Huene's sunlit back office looks almost untouched by time, save for the Bose stereo and a wall-mounted bookshelf full of CDs. During his favorite part of the process, carefully handcarving the front window of each recorder to allow sound to be produced, he listens not to Bach concertos, but to rock and jazz.

"I enjoy coming in every day because you're creating something. If you do your job right, you're making the performer happy, and if they're performing for other people, you're making an audience happy. It's a win-win situation," von Huene says. "I am personally connected to each instrument. It's almost like a child—almost. I take offense when people mess with it. You spend a lot of time with it. You're breathing life into it." ◆

FOR GOOD MEASURE

The well-decorated Frenchman Vincent Lindon scored three Best Actor awards—including a 2015 Cannes Film Festival win—with his portrayal of a quiet grocery store security guard in Stéphane Brizé's The Measure of a Man. He plays Thierry, a man struggling to rebuild his life after being laid off from his factory job nearly two years earlier. He must deal with everything from unsuccessful Skype interviews to questions of morality before his luck finally turns. Lindon is currently filming 2017's Rodin, playing the sculptor himself, but you can size him up July 28-Aug. 6, when the film screens at the MFA as an encore presentation of the Boston French Film Festival. / Brigitte Carriero

Reviews by Brett Michel

THE BFG ★★1/2 When word first broke that beloved director Steven Spielberg would be directing an adaptation of The BFG, a wonderful book by Roald Dahl, another revered chronicler of stories consumed by millions, there was reason to rejoice. Adding to the enticement, Spielberg would be working from a script by the late Melissa Mathison, best known as the writer of Spielberg's enduring family classic, 1982's E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial. Unfortunately, many of Dahl's darker edges have been sanded off by Mathison and Spielberg, who's working with Disney for the first time. But if you loved the fart jokes in Dahl's book, well, Spielberg apparently did too! And although the director has once again captured a wonderful performance from his child lead (newcomer Ruby Barnhill), he strains to find the magic that came so effortlessly back in '82, the same year Dahl's book was published, adorned with Quentin Blake's loose but lively illustrations. The messiness of Blake's drawings is greatly missed here, replaced by the pristine sheen of expensive visual effects that try too hard to make the titular Big Friendly Giant (Mark Rylance, bringing real warmth to his motion-captured role) and his surroundings look "real," in a production that's ironically unattractive and garish. In other words, the film's visual style could have used more, well, style. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

FINDING DORY ★★★ Thirteen years have transpired since Disney Pixar's Finding Nemo swam into viewers' hearts on its way to winning an Oscar; fortunately, this sequel feels more like a continuation than a window-dressed remake. Returning director Andrew Stanton regains his sea legs, confidently diving back into the animated oceans after trying his hand at live action with Disney's 2012 mega-flop, John Carter. A victim of bad marketing, that under-appreciated fantasy is better than you've heard; you could do worse than seeking it out on video after heading to the theater for the fulfilling further adventures of overprotective clownfish Marlin (voiced once again by Albert Brooks) and his differently abled son Nemo (Hayden Rolence, replacing the now-adult Alexander Gould), who have settled back into life in their coral reef after returning from Australia. Stanton, along with co-writer/co-director Angus MacLane, continues to shine a positive light on those who are different, shifting the focus to Dory (the returning Ellen DeGeneres), the blue tang who suffers from short-term memory loss. When she suddenly recalls her parents, the three set off to find them as Dory also begins a journey to find herself, aided immeasurably by a deeper performance by DeGeneres. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

GHOSTBUSTERS ★1/2 Here's a movie that's been taking knocks since it was announced, as misogynistic man-children, armed with fond memories of Ivan Reitman's comedy classic, 1984's Ghostbusters, took to the Internet to decry the notion of a female-led reboot. And even when the first trailer for Paul Feig's film failed to elicit many laughs from general moviegoers, this critic stood firm in his belief that while Feig's brand of comedy rarely translates in two-minute trailers, it shines in two-hour films such as 2011's Bridesmaids and last summer's Spy, both of which featured Feig's comedic ace-in-the-hole: Melissa McCarthy. She's back, alongside Bridesmaids' Kristen Wiig and Saturday Night Live's Kate McKinnon and Leslie Jones, who band together to battle the supernatural. All four actresses are comic spitfires...in other projects. Sad to say, this film never rises above its opening, when a tour guide (Silicon Valley's Zach Woods) informs visitors at a supposedly haunted estate of the New York manor's once-innovative "face bidet" and "anti-Irish fence." Those are funny lines, but the comedy soon stops nearly as dead as the ectoplasm-spewing apparitions that appear. Thor's Chris Hemsworth steals a few laughs as the ghostbusting gals' himbo assistant, but not even the God of Thunder can lend enough sparks to bring this lame film to laugh-filled life. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

INDEPENDENCE DAY: RESURGENCE ★ Disaster movies were a steady part of the summer movie diet in the '70s, back when Hollywood regularly capsized cruise liners, crashed jetliners, torched skyscrapers and destroyed Los Angeles via acts of God. Tastes change, and the '80s saw the rise of the summer action hero. Then writer/director Roland Emmerich cooked up a new(ish) flavor of cinematic junk food for the '90s when he mashed the two genres together with his alien-invasion thriller, Independence Day. Well into the aughts, he continued making similar apocalyptic entertainments like The Day After Tomorrow and 2012, with diminishing returns. But after making a disaster movie of a different kind with his universally derided gay-rights drama Stonewall, Emmerich returns to his roots with this sequel no one asked for, which finds the aliens returning (20 years to the day!) to mine our planet's core—just because! Will Smith smartly passed on returning to the series that made him a star, while Emmerich has done away with the slow buildup to destruction, catering his bland concoction to audiences who've grown used to seeing landmarks obliterated onscreen every other week. Given the empty theaters this is playing in, I'm apparently not the only one who's tired of this brand of leftovers. (At Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Legend of Tarzan ★1/2 I can't remember the last time a big-budget studio film was released in such a woefully unfinished state as this umpteenth take on Tarzan from director David Yates, who built his reputation with the final four Harry Potter films. He'll need to rebuild that reputation when this $180 million flop fails to find an audience. That's right, $180 million. For a shirtless guy (a bulked-up Alexander Skarsgård) who swings through the jungle on vines. Sadly, neither vines nor the jungle look particularly convincing, since nearly half of the movie's visual effects shots appear to be incomplete, as does the editing. This is an ugly movie, one that looks more like a video game than something you'd expect to find onscreen at the cinema. My guess is that Warner Bros. simply decided to cut their losses, rather than funnel more money into this over-budgeted monstrosity—which is unfortunate, since Skarsgård makes for a soulful piece of beefcake, while rising star Margot Robbie is appealingly scrappy as Lord Greystoke's wife, the not-so-distressed damsel Jane. Also unfortunate is the decision to add an American sidekick, George Washington Williams. As played by Samuel L. Jackson, this gunslinger leaves one half-expecting he'll recruit Tarzan for the Avengers. Ape-Man, anyone? (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Maggie's Plan ★★★ Writer/director Rebecca Miller introduces us to 30-something school administrator Maggie (Greta Gerwig) when the best-intentioned meddler is mistakenly issued a paycheck belonging to adjunct professor John Harding (Ethan Hawke), a "ficto-critical anthropologist." Maggie plans to have a baby through artificial insemination, since she feels she'll never find love or be mature enough for marriage. She might be right about that second part. When John asks Maggie to take a look at his novel-in-progress, she not only loves his writing, but falls for him as well. So what if he's married with two children? Jumping ahead a few years, Maggie has become a minivan-driving mom to three kids—one with John, along with her older stepchildren—or four, if you include the man who avoids adult responsibilities by focusing his time and energy on the now-massive book he may never finish. Meanwhile, John's Danish ex-wife Georgette (Julianne Moore) is about to publish a memoir—with Maggie as a featured villain. So, Maggie decides to rebuild the home she's wrecked, restoring balance to lives that may have worked better before she entered. Miller fills the film with good humor, if not guffaws, aided immeasurably by a generous ensemble of actors who project decency, even when their characters make questionable decisions. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Our Little Sister ★★★★ Japan's Hirokazu Koreeda continues to carry the mantle laid down by his countryman, the late, great filmmaker Yasujiro Ozu. But the 54-year-old former documentarian isn't interested in adhering to Ozu's unique formalism, which expertly documented fallible humanity and the passage of time, with nary a camera move to be seen. Nevertheless, Koreeda's portraits are just as humane, by turns heartwarming and heartbreaking. His incredibly moving latest, Our Little Sister (or "Umimachi Diary" in Japan), which deservedly won four of the 13 Japanese Academy Awards for which it was nominated, is loosely derived from Akimi Yoshida's long-running manga of the same name. Koreeda's adaptation follows the teenaged Suzu Asano (Newcomer of the Year winner Suzu Hirose), who moves in with her three adult half-sisters (Haruka Ayase, Masami Nagasawa and Kaho) in their large old house in the seaside town of Kamakura. Koreeda opens his film with the funeral of the four sisters' philandering father, a plot point derived from the source material. He's narrowed the focus, however, keeping his lens trained on Suzu and her eldest sister, Sachi (Ayase), the only one of the three Kôda family siblings old enough to clearly recall their father. Thus, she's the only one who shares Suzu's complex feelings for the irresponsible yet caring man. Simply lovely. (At Kendall Square.)

The Secret Life of Pets ★★ This family film from Universal Pictures and their computer animation partner Illumination Entertainment (creators of the monosyllabic Minions, stars of a short that precedes the main feature) has become a box-office smash, but creatively, it's splashing around in the shallow end of the pool. Just compare the depth of Albert Brooks' Marlin character in Disney Pixar's latest, Finding Dory, to the sharp-taloned falcon, Tiberius, he plays here. The former displays a full range of human emotions and feelings (even though he's a fish), while the predator he plays here is mostly a cheap gimmick used to mine laughs with the threat of pointless violence and cruelty toward animals that this film from the team of director Chris Renaud and writers Cinco Paul and Ken Daurio (who gave us Despicable Me and its sequel) occasionally pushes too far. The pandering, lazy screenplay recycles the basic structure (but not the emotional center) of Pixar's Toy Story, replacing toys with pets, though we get to see precious little of the animals' secret life, as promised by the title and appealing trailers, which featured the best jokes. Something's very wrong when you hire Louis C.K., one of the smartest comics out there, to voice Max, a dumb dog in a film filled with stupid, crowd-pleasing animals. Woof. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Swiss Army Man ★★★ When we first see the heavily bearded, disheveled Hank (Paul Dano), he's apparently stranded on an island, moments from hanging himself by a noose. Tightening the make-shift rope around his neck, he glimpses something we gather he hasn't seen in quite some time: another human, who's washed up on shore not 20 yards away, the surf nipping at his heels. Then Hank loses his footing, and we hear a snap. Ah, but this is just the beginning of the strangest comedy you're likely to see this year, the debut film from "the Daniels," aka Dan Kwan and Daniel Scheinert, a writer/director duo in their 20s who met when they were students at Emerson College. Turns out, that body is a corpse, but the real surprise isn't that the waterlogged, sal-low figure with a perpetually open mouth and an unblinking eye is played by Daniel Radcliffe. Instead, it's that his stomach begins to rumble, which quickly escalates into outright flatulence. Soon, Hank is rocketing across the ocean, using "Manny" as a Jet Ski propelled by, well, gas. All this before the opening credits—and it gets stranger from here. Could this be an Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge? Ultimately, it's up to adventurous viewers to decide. (At Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Wiener-Dog ★★★1/2 There was a mini-uproar among fans of independent cinema when word broke that writer/director Todd Solondz had cast indie film It Girl Greta Gerwig to play Dawn Wiener in his latest movie. How could he make a film named Wiener-Dog, presumably a sequel to his breakthrough, Welcome to the Dollhouse, and not bring back Heather Matarazzo, who embodied the role so memorably in the 1995 picture? Matarazzo, it must be noted, once famously penned an essay about how she'd lost a different part because the financiers didn't think she was "fuckable cnough." Of course, if you really follow Solondz and his uncomfortable brand of offkilter humor, you'd know that A) He'd already killed off Dawn (offscreen) in 2004's Palindromes; B) He'd recast all of the roles from 1998's Happiness in that film's 2009 sequel, Life During Wartime; and C) Wiener-Dog is not a sequel. What Solondz's latest is, however, is a very entertaining, sometimes uproarious and often upsetting anthology of four separate stories that are loosely connected (and occasionally impacted) by the presence of a dachshund, starring a terrifically depressed cast that not only includes Gerwig, but Julie Delpy, Kieran Culkin, Danny DeVito and Oscar winner Ellen Burstyn. So, buy a hot dog at the concession stand, sit back and enjoy! (At Somerville.)

MUSIC

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

LIVIN' IS EAZY It would be easy to pigeonhole G-Eazy as the second coming of Macklemore. With his signature pompadour and swagger, the indie rapper definitely shares some of his fellow West Coast emcee's steez. But the Oakland rapper, who first generated Internet buzz with his 2011 cover of '60s doo-wop hit "Runaround Sue," is carving out a space in the genre that is all his own. Proving he has the chops to back up his slick James Dean style, he dominated rap and pop charts with his October single "Me, Myself & I," and with a new Britney Spears collab, a song on the Ghostbusters soundtrack and an international summer tour that brings him to Boston right after a set at Lollapalooza, G-Eazy is working hard. Catch his flow when he drops by the Xfinity Center on Aug. 3. / Alexandra Cavallo

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

NOVEL APPROACH The artists featured in Fuller Craft Museum's exhibit Metamorphosis: The Art of Altered Books might go by the book, but they certainly don't follow the rules. Consider jewelry maker Jeremy May, who quite literally takes a page from his reading material. Upon finishing the final chapter of a book, he thoughtfully considers the plot before slicing, laminating and polishing its pages into what he feels is a fitting ring, necklace or brooch. Then there's self-taught wood carver Long-Bin Chen, who wields chainsaws, drills and nail guns on outdated phone books and dictionaries to creatively craft busts of Buddha and Einstein. Starting July 30, bibliophiles and art lovers alike can peruse their work alongside that of Andrew Hayes, Wendy Wahl and Jacqueline Rush Lee—whose Strata is seen above—at the Brockton museum, where Metamorphosis is on view through Nov. 6. / Sarah Hagman

HAIL TO THE CHIEFS

How many CEOs can you fit into Symphony Hall? Lots, apparently, since the 35th annual Presidents at Pops was packed to the rafters with captains of industry, VIPs and assorted movers and shakers.

Seen sipping wine at the cocktail reception preceding the concert: Dot-boy-done-good Bob Davis, the Wizard of All That's Wonderful Bill Achtmeyer with his amazing enchantress, Alli, the bewitching and beguiling RoAnn Costin, statuesque blonde Holly McGrath and her adoring other half, David Bruce, diamond dealers Donna DePrisco and Jennifer Kinsman, arts patron extraordinaire Maria Stata, brunette marketing babe Jane Deery, radio bigwig Mary Menna and her real estate mack daddy, Peter Darveau, investment guru Dick Connolly, power chick Geri Denterlein and her little Blue Devil, John Patrick Thomas, Blue Devil/hoops deity Tommy Amaker, dog-loving daddies John Wolfarth and Kevin Powers, real estate titan Peter Palandjian and BSO head honcho Mark Volpe. The evening honored the late Staples founder and mega-philanthropist Tom Stemberg, and sparkling like the gem that she is was his stunning wife, Katherine Chapman Stemberg.

The concert, featuring the absurdly talented Mandy Patinkin, had hands clapping and feet stomping—a rarity in Symphony Hall. The evening ended with the much-loved "The Stars and Stripes Forever," accompanied by the flag unfurling and a balloon drop, and long after the last note ended, the departing crowd continued to pop them.

The evening's best exchange: "So what are you doing for your summer vacation?"

"I'm interning in Washington, D.C., on Capitol Hill."

"Good luck...and buy deodorant."

A MUSHROOM BY ANY OTHER NAME

Nothing says summer quite like a cocktail party in a beautiful garden, and when you throw in gorgeous people in elaborate hats, it's like Cecil Beaton designed the whole thing. That was the case at the Rose Garden Party, a visually arresting, unfailingly fabulous evening to benefit Park Arts, held in the Kelleher Rose Garden in the Fenway.

Hosted by Mayor Walsh and Lorrie Higgins, the feast for the eyes began with a hat contest disguised as a cocktail hour among trellises of every imaginable variety of rose, while the judges—yours truly, genius milliner Marie Galvin, fashion historian Kathleen McDermott and walking Met Gala Elisha Daniels—struggled to identify the most elegant, creative and DIY hats, fascinators and headbands. Among those being judged: hat addict Maggie Ahearn, scratch golfer Lisa Simons, sexbomb interior designer Steven Favreau, the naturally carbonated Jodi Wolin, fashionista Candice Wu, the seriously gorgeous Amber D'Amelio, raven-haired beauty Molly Dunne, NEC rainmaker Janet "Countess Marabucci" Goff, BSO babe Kim Noltemy, blond bombshell Adrienne Camire, Trustees factotum Ed Wilson, Fenway head honcha Beth Krudys, BC booster Ingrid Calder and one woman who said, "I enjoyed gala season a little too much, so the only thing I fit into is pajama bottoms."

The evening's best compliment, bestowed upon Elisha Daniels: "I saw Amal Clooney in that dress, and it was too short on her. It looks much better on you." Meanwhile, the evening's most amusing remark was this: "I don't wear hats. They make me look like a toadstool."

TWO GREEN THUMBS UP

Everyone got their Gatsby on at the opening night cocktail party for the Newport Flower Show, held at the iconic Bellevue Avenue mansion Rosecliff.

Seen stopping to smell the roses were such bold-faced names as the dapper Tarleton Watkins, père et fils, with the delightful Janet Atkins, stunning brunette Lynn Kaye with her adoring other half, Jonathan, Preservation Society grand poobah Monty Burnham, garden guru Kent Russell, iconic interior designer Bunny Williams, flower whisperer Bruno Duarte, publishing mogul William F. Lucey III, jewelry designer Angela Moore and tastemaker Michael Devine, to name a mere handful.

The wine was poured by two living statues in bronze body paint, and a light buffet kept everyone well fed while swanning around on the lawn. The evening's best remark: "I appreciate flower shows because I can't even grow mold on cheese." ◆

MILES, MARKED

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO THIS month, The Improper's very first issue hit the streets, so we of course wanted to do something special to mark the occasion. But milestones can be tricky to maneuver. We didn't want our 25th Anniversary issue to feel backward-looking or indulge in too much back-patting. So instead, we started to think about the next 25 years and the people who might shape them. We decided to round up 25 up-and-coming locals age 25 and under who are doing amazing things in the arts, sciences, sports, business and beyond, from our cover subject, Red Sox shortstop Xander Bogaerts, to the hard-working 20-year-old who makes sure Marty Walsh arrives to appointments on time and a pair of college entrepreneurs whose product is already in 400 stores across the country. It's a small but striking sampling of the tons of young talent we have in this town, one we hope inspires you as much as it did us.

OK, we couldn't resist a little retrospection, but we wanted to make it about the magazine's most important asset—you, our readers. So Meghan Kavanaugh scoured the archives of our Sightings section for a look back at all the weird and wonderful places readers have taken the mag over the years. Meanwhile, Jonathan Soroff interviews Lynn-born journalist Lesley Stahl, who just celebrated her own 25th season with 60 Minutes. And Alexandra Cavallo dials back to the decade of our founding for a beauty story, updating '90s hair trends for today. Speaking of updates, you may notice a couple more: our brand-new logo and our revamped website. Let us know what you think. In the meantime, we're off to pop the pink bubbly from Sandy Block's wine column. Cheers.

NINETEEN NINETY NOW

PRO TIPS ON THE RETURN OF '90S HAIR.

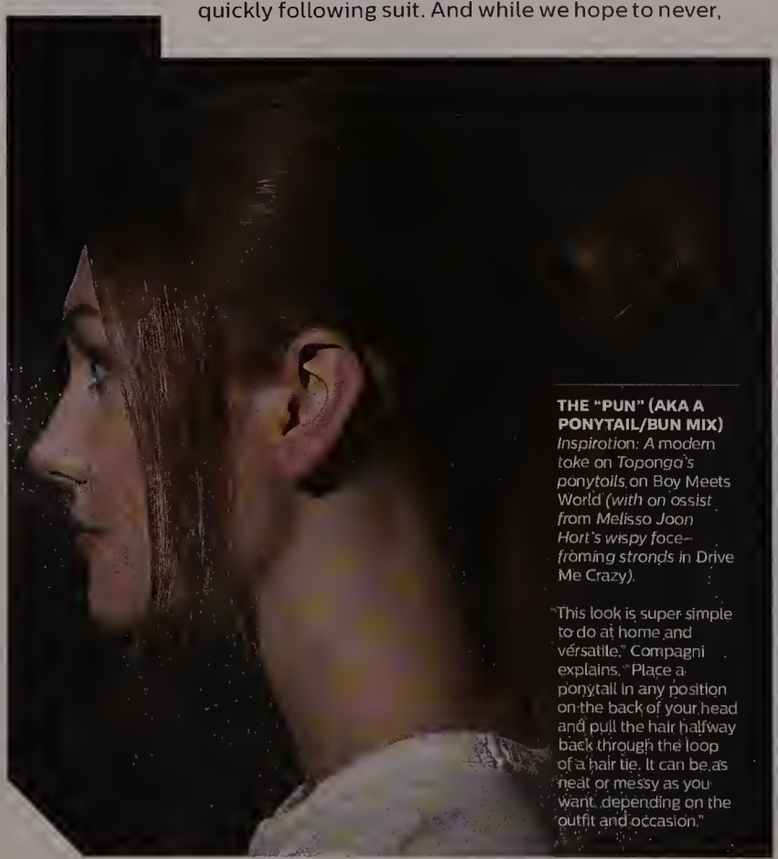
SUBTLE ACCENT BRAIDS
Inspiration: Alicia Silverstone's top braids, updated to fit current trends.

"These braids are injected sporadically through sleek styles to add a touch of soft whimsy and depth," Compagni says. "When applying this look at home, just place a braid or two inside a look; you shouldn't make the braid tight, and you don't want to see where the braid starts. Place them under a top layer, around the ears or anywhere you can tuck it away and catch little glimpses."



DOUBLE BUNS
Inspiration: Gwen Stefani's No Doubt-era head knots.

"This look is a softer, more playful version of sock buns or a twist on the top knots," Compagni says. "Just take two separate sections and loosely twist them into soft wispy buns. This look is meant to be a little messy . . so layers that don't all fit in the bun are an added bonus to the look."

WHOOMP, HAIR IT IS!

Look around: From chokers to crop tops, Doc Martens to skater dresses, and all the flannel a Cambridge pub can handle, the '90s are back. We're not mad about it. And it's not just fashion throwing it back to the halcyon days of Clueless and Pearl Jam: Hairstyles are quickly following suit. And while we hope to never, ever see a sparkly butterfly clip again, we're seriously digging modern updates on some of our favorite '90s trends. So we tapped stylist Brent Compagni of Kent Newton Salon to school us on how to rock some grunge-era looks in 2016. Pro tip: Subtlety is the order of the day. / Alexandra Cavallo

THE "PUN" (AKA A PONYTAIL/BUN MIX)
Inspiration: A modern take on Topanga's ponytails on Boy Meets World (with an assist from Melissa Joan Hart's wispy face-framing strands in Drive Me Crazy*).*

"This look is super simple to do at home and versatile," Compagni explains. "Place a ponytail in any position on the back of your head and pull the hair halfway back through the loop of a hair tie. It can be as neat or messy as you want, depending on the outfit and occasion."

ZIGZAG PARTING
Inspiration: Neve Campbell and her '90s zigzag parts.

"It should be deep and deliberate, placed either right in the center or to enhance an extreme side part," Compagni says. "This look can easily be created at home by taking the edge of a comb or clip and zigzagging through your part. Make sure it's clean and precise to play up the drama of the zigzag."

TIDE'S IN

THE COAST IS CLEAR FOR SCELFO'S NEW SPOT

MUCH OF THE EARLY BUZZ HAS billed chef Michael Scelfo's forthcoming Waypoint restaurant as simply a seafood spot. While Scelfo doesn't want to get too technical, he sees it more as a restaurant with coastal-inspired fare.

"Everything has a sort of seafood current running through it—no pun intended. But it definitely has other areas," Scelfo says of Waypoint, which is slated to open in mid-August at the edge of Harvard Square, about a 10-minute walk from his first restaurant, Alden & Harlow. "We wanted to showcase all kinds of things that are great from along the coast. ... We're dealing with coastal purveyors, farms, dairies and artisans."

That breadth is evident on the menu, which has housemade pasta and pizza sections in addition to a raw bar section and categories of snacks, plates and larger-format dishes, which may include whole fish and poultry as well as lamb shoulders and big rib-eye steaks, all cooked in the large pizza oven on display in the open kitchen. The menu will also have a bread program showcasing a fish sauce-infused baguette and both squid-ink and seaweed-infused bread. Full caviar service will be offered, and the staff will cure its own anchovies and make its own fish sauce and hot sauce.

"It's all got that local love going into it and that scratch touch. It's great. It's another opportunity, I feel like, to say, 'This is what we feel about seafood and coastal dining,'" Scelfo says. "I think it's really different and also uniquely complementary to what we're doing at Alden. I think they'll feel inherently connected but still be their own unique concepts."

Waypoint's wide-open layout with lots of natural light also stands out from Alden's meandering, subterranean digs. Three light fixtures meant to evoke weathered fishing gear hang from the ceiling above a large raw bar display near the entrance, while a high-top communal table, a chef's table and a bunch of marble-top tables fill the rest of the 140-seat space. A walnut bar stretches along the right side of the room; it has a built-in column with spigots for Waypoint's absinthe program, which will feature 20 types of the spirit and work its way into a handful of cocktails.

"I'm a huge absinthe fan, and I think it goes really beautifully with shellfish, so it's going to be kind of fun," Scelfo says. "And nobody has it in Boston, so we're really excited to showcase it and do something different."

Scelfo admits the excitement he feels in opening Waypoint is different from what he experienced when opening Alden & Harlow: "I'm not living and breathing on every single nail that goes into the wall or every screw. I was like that with Alden because it was my first and I didn't have anything else. Now I've got Alden in place and occupied and it's plenty to keep me humming and running."

POINTS OF INTEREST: Waypoint is focused on coastal influences, as seen in squid-ink bread and a variety of seafood fare.

DEL-ISH: Tasty, traditional beef dumplings shine at Kendall Square's new Jewish deli.

Good Eats: Hot Mamaleh

Kreplach may have fallen out of popularity at some Jewish delis, but the butter-fried dumplings have a starring role at new Kendall Square eatery Mamaleh's Delicatessen, opened by the team behind the neighboring State Park in July, complete with a market and a full bar. The beef kreplach skew toward traditional roots with a sour cream dough base and stuffing made with braised brisket, onions, garlic, paprika and egg, but there's a modern twist: a sauce of pickled shallots with horseradish sour cream and gremolata that gives each crispy bite a welcome zing. "We wanted to adhere to a lot of the deli classics while kind of reinventing them as well," says chef/co-owner Tyler Sundet. Mazel tov. / Meghan Kavanaugh

SPARKLE IN PINK

Take two of the hottest trends in the wine business, rosé and sparkling wine, marry them together and what do you have? A winner! The following bottles of pink bubbly are guaranteed to make any occasion a delicious celebration. Each incorporates some of the cherry- and berry-like flavors of red grapes with the "cut" and structure imparted by the dissolved carbon dioxide. / Sandy Block

JCB BRUT ROSÉ, CRÉMANT DE BOURGOGNE, NV

Crafted by the amazing Jean-Charles Boisset in the traditional method, this crémant is pale, engagingly aromatic and bone dry. With a pinot noir base, it has a floral, subtle red fruit character and a creamy texture. It finishes with a chalky citric minerality and is a great foil for smoked fish, charcuterie or other salty dishes.

$27, Gordon's Fine Wines and Liquors, Waltham

BOUVET BRUT ROSÉ EXCELLENCE, VIN MOUSSEUX, NV

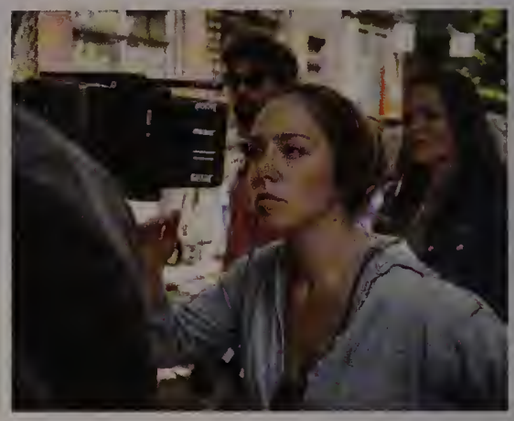
Bouvet is the leading producer of bottle-fermented sparkling wine in Saumur, France. Made mostly from Loire cabernet franc with a small proportion of groslot, this is a very gentle and refined, beautifully structured rosé. Made by short skin contact at the beginning of the first fermentation, it shows light yeastiness and fresh tangerine scents and has the tangy, lingering flavor of a red fruit compote.

$16, Winestone, Chestnut Hill

GRAHAM BECK BRUT ROSÉ, NV

This wine from vineyards in South Africa's Robertson and Stellenbosch districts is composed of chardonnay and pinot noir fermented separately and then blended. It has an appealing aroma of garden herbs, stone fruit and raspberry, and a bit more toastiness than the others, having been aged for up to a year and a half on the yeast. A bit richer and fuller in fruit expression, it's lovely with pasta or scallops.

$18, Wine Riot, Boston



MARQUES DE GELIDA BRUT RESERVA, PINOT NOIR CAVA, NV

This Catalonia sparkler comes from a parcel of head-trained vines planted on limestone clay soils. Crisp, bright and assertively dry, it has a captivating perfume of cherry and strawberry blossoms. Its direct, straightforward charm is hard to resist at the price. This wine is full enough on the palate to work well with relatively spicy fare or fried fish.

$20, The Wine Cask, Somerville

STREAM QUEEN

Cambridge-born writer and filmmaker Sian Heder wrote for three seasons of the binge-worthy Oronge Is the New Block before turning to her first feature film, Tallulah, just released on Netflix. She gave us a behind-the-scenes look at the dramedy, whose cast includes Ellen Page, Allison Janney and OITNB's own Uzo Aduba. / Brigitte Carreiro

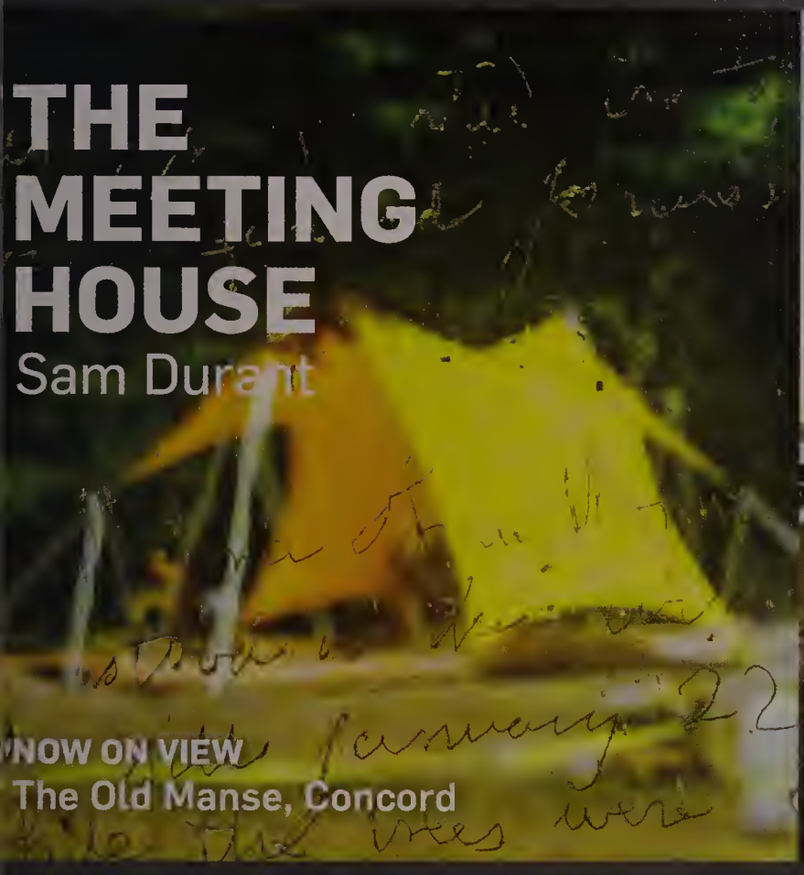
TELL US ABOUT THE FILM. It's about a young woman, played by Ellen Page, who in a moment of impulse kidnaps—but she feels rescues—a baby from a negligent mother and radically transforms the lives of three very different women.

WHAT WENT INTO THE DECISION TO RELEASE IT ONLINE? I think Netflix is opening a lot of doors for filmmakers. They have a huge reach and are in countries all over the world and have millions and millions of viewers, so I think it's a way to—particularly as an indie filmmaker—have your work reach a lot of people, and that's really exciting.



THERE'S A STRONG THEME OF FEMALE EMPOWERMENT IN BOTH ORANGE IS THE NEW BLACK AND TALLULAH. WHAT DRAWS YOU TO THAT? Being an empowered female myself, I do think that women's stories have not been told enough, stories that deal with complicated, flawed women. Certainly on both Oronge Is the New Block and Tolluloh, I'm interested in exploring women who have made tragic mistakes and are trying to recover from those choices.

HOW DO YOUR ROOTS PLAY INTO YOUR FILMMAKING? I always try to have little shout-outs to Cambridge or Boston hidden in my movies. There's a character from Somerville, and she talks about waitressing at Tallulah's Bar and Grill, which is a place I used to waitress at in Davis Square, and I put Massachusetts plates on her van. So even though the film is set in New York, I tried to have a little hometown love in there.

WHAT'S YOUR NEXT PROJECT? Right now, I'm writing and directing a movie for Lionsgate, which is a remake of a French film called Lo Fomille Bélier, and I've decided to set it in a fishing community in Gloucester. So I've been spending some time in Gloucester with fishermen to get that whole world right.

The Meeting House is a platform for inspiring new ideas about the intractable structures of racial discrimination and segregation, as well as celebrating African-American culture. Based on houses built by the first free Africans in Concord (1770s), the pavilion structure creates an open, transparent framework that points to the future.

Out of 25 YEARS THE VAULT

The Improper is celebrating its 25th anniversary in 2016, and to properly mark the occasion, we've been digging through the archives for gems from issues past. For our official 25th Anniversary issue, we took a look back at some of the celebs who qualify for the Triple Star Club...which is what we're calling the honor of having graced our cover no fewer than three times during the past 25 years.

MAURA TIERNEY

Tierney first graced our cover back in '98, the year before she landed her gig as nurse Abby Lockhart on ER, a career-making role that was eventually followed by her Golden Globe-winning turn on Showtime's The Affair...and her third Improper cover.

DENIS LEARY
2000, 2004, 2015

Few celebs (give or take a Wahlberg) are more Boston than Leary, which is why the Rescue Me star—currently starring on FX's Sex & Drugs & Rock & Roll—has gotten so much Improper face-time over the years.

MARIA MENOUNOS
2004, 2007, 2012

The Medford-born, Emerson grad-turned-E! host-turned-powerhouse brand has certainly earned her three-time cover status with both her cover-girl looks and her boss resume.

JOEY MCINTYRE
2002, 2004, 2006

Five letters: NKOTB. Being a member of Boston's beloved boy band obviously guaranteed McIntyre at least one Improper cover, but the former New Kid went on to secure a solid solo career for himself—not to mention age very, very well.

MIKE O'MALLEY
2001, 2006, 2010

O'Malley is one of those everymen who seems to have appeared in, well, everything. Notable credits include spots on hit TV shows like Parenthood and Parks and Recreation, an Emmy-nominated turn on Glee and a starring role on Yes, Dear. And, of course, three separate starring roles on our covers.

THANKS, AND NO THANKS

TO THE KIND, KIND PEOPLE WHO GAVE UP THEIR CORNER-BAR SEATS AT LEGAL HARBORSIDE TUESDAY EVENING SO MY FRIEND AND I COULD SIT AND HAVE A DRINK OVERLOOKING THE WATER:
A thousand thanks. We had just come from his neuro-oncology and chemo appointment and were looking for a place and a way to celebrate the good MRI news that he'd made it another month without any advancement of his cancer. The place was packed to the gills, and after seeing and then losing the seats to you, we figured we'd just have to head back to the suburbs. With his eye patch, terrible balance and heavy battery-pack treatment knapsack, standing was not going to be an option for us. We were really surprised and so grateful that you offered us the seats. We didn't think fast enough to send over a bottle of wine (and we lost sight of you in the crush of people), but want you to know that your generosity completely turned around our evening. There's a special place in heaven for you all. Thanks.
— Thanks with a view

TO ALL THE HUCKSTERS ON NEWBURY STREET AND BOYLSTON STREET:
The daily barrage of lame pick-up lines—"Oh, you look friendly" or "What a beautiful smile you have"—is not going to work on me. When hucking Doctors Without Borders, the Children's Fund, etc., don't fiscally shame me when I say no! It's my money, and I'll give it to whoever I want to! Leave us all alone. I live in this neighborhood, and frankly, I'm annoyed with your daily assaults! Go away!
— Word on the street

TO THE ALT-ROCK GUY WORKING AT THE STARBUCKS ON BOYLSTON:
Thanks for the free Americano and confidence boost—you deserve a proper coffeehouse girlfriend.
— I like you a latte

COMRADE IN ARMS

A MAN AND HIS CANINE COMPANION BATTLE A FEARSOME FOE IN AN IMAGINATIVE DEBUT NOVEL

Lily and the Octopus* by Steven Rowley
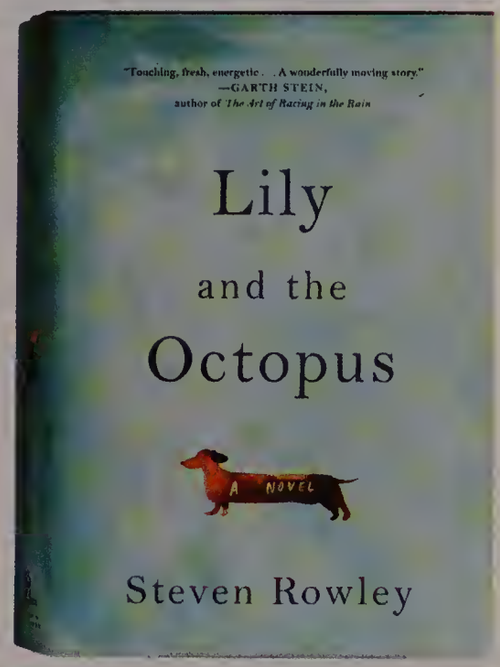
Published by Simon & Schuster, 320 pages, $26

WHEN PEOPLE TALK ABOUT "fighting cancer," that enemy is internal and often invisible. Guns and wrestling aren't actually involved. But in Emerson College alum Steven Rowley's debut novel, a gigantic tumor sitting on the eye of a small dachshund takes the form of an octopus, becoming a cheeky and repulsively present opponent.



Ted, a partnerless gay guy, worships his small companion, dachshund Lily, who happily "talks" in barking capital letters, plays card games and fills the love cup wonderfully. Anthropomorphizing Lily's malady, Ted denies the octopus's actual meaning while fighting a verbal and physical war against the beast. He also casts arrows of disdain at his therapist, who appears to be on the right path; Ted seems to need someone to punish for his sadness and fear.

Ted and Lily use inflatable plastic sharks to threaten the octopus—unsuccessfully. Later, when man and dog go to sea on a boat called Fishful Thinking, planning to violently pursue their enemy, a seemingly friendly man on a ship transforms into the octopus they've come to drown. But for all the metaphorical and magical nature of the story, Rowley manages to make it seem somehow realistic—in part because he also conveys the terror of the upcoming loss of a devoted loved one so well.

FROM PAGE 272: It's clear now, the source of her distraction—she never responds to me when she senses red ball is near. My insides settle and I watch her play as life ambles toward normalcy. It is the perfect moment, a perfect marriage of stillness and life, of beauty and harmony, of aloneness and togetherness. Red ball glides smoothly across the deck of Fishful Thinking and Lily chases it with ease and I've never felt more calm.

But it doesn't last.

Out of the corner of my eye I see fire in the sky, like a comet, coming toward us with increasing velocity. ◆

Sixty miles east of Los Angeles, in the heart of California's Inland Empire, the sprawling city of Riverside isn't exactly a hotbed of tourism...except for one remarkable place. Whether you're an architecture buff, a spa devotee or a traveler who revels in the uniquely idiosyncratic, the Mission Inn Hotel and Spa will capture your attention and hold it for days on end.

For starters, this National Historic Landmark is the country's largest Mission Revival-style building, taking up an entire city block. But there's more than Mission going on here—original owner and developer Frank Miller was unconstrained by consistency, building wings in differing architectural styles and adding whatever details suited his taste. That's why the row of flying buttresses along one side are merely Gothic decorative elements, instead of serving their usual structural function. Miller built the inn in stages, finishing the final Rotunda Wing in 1931, when Riverside was thriving as the birthplace of the California citrus industry and a destination for Hollywood celebrities and other notables; the Mission Inn was where they unpacked their trunks and stayed for months at a time.

Given the risk of getting lost among the initially overwhelming array of towers, spiral staircases, corridors and courtyards, your best bet is to sign up for a docent-led tour from the Mission Inn Museum. You're sure to hear the story of the custom-built Taft chair, which Frank Miller commissioned for our famously rotund 27th president. Good intentions notwithstanding, when President Taft visited, he was mightily offended by the large-scale furniture and declined to take it back to the White House.

A number of other presidents enjoyed Miller's hospitality. Some of their portraits line the wall outside the Presidential Lounge, which serves cocktails from a menu entitled "If These Walls Could Talk." Martinis are named for Richard Nixon (who was married at the inn), Theodore Roosevelt, George W. Bush and Ronald Reagan. Other guests, such as Ginger Rogers, Albert Einstein and Harry Houdini, are similarly honored, though no cocktails have yet been created to mark the visits of more recent fab guests such as Miss Piggy and Leonardo DiCaprio.

Also fabulous: the inn's pool, which is surrounded by palms and other greenery, accessorized by a large hot tub and equipped with plenty of lounge chairs and soft towels. It's refreshing to take a dip after a workout in the fitness center, which curiously has no mirrors, but does boast two (nonworking) fireplaces, hardwood floors and stained-glass windows.

Speaking of stained glass, eight Tiffany windows grace the larger of the two chapels at the inn, which hosts about 300 weddings each year. The St. Francis of Assisi Chapel was built to accommodate an 18th-century Mexican altarpiece that rises from floor to ceiling in 18-karat gilded splendor. It was assembled piece by piece with wooden pegs after it was shipped to Miller in boxes. Outside the chapel, the Famous Fliers Wall pays tribute to Charles Lindbergh, John Glenn and the Tuskegee Airmen, among others. More than 150 pairs of copper wings—including a pair for Amelia Earhart, who visited the inn—decorate this International Shrine for Aviators, to whom the chapel was dedicated in 1932.

Eclectic design aside, the inn is a AAA Four Diamond property, with all the bells and whistles you'd expect. Rooms are spacious; some on the upper floors have vaulted ceilings, stained-glass windows and balconies. (Ask for a room overlooking the pool or a courtyard, and you'll hear less noise from the surrounding downtown streets.) The grounds are gorgeous, a tableau of Spanish patios filled with fountains, colorful tile and palm trees; the resident pair of Brazilian macaws, Napoleon and Josephine, shriek hello to passers-by as the California sun shines on bright pink bougainvillea. And the on-site Kelly's Spa is 7,000 square feet of indulgence, with eucalyptus steam rooms and offerings that range from a hydrating marine wrap to microdermabrasion to "Four Hands Massage" (massage a trois, anyone?). Custom packages are a specialty.

With four restaurants (six if you count the Presidential Lounge and 54 Degrees, which serve light fare as well as drinks), plus a cupcake shop, dining options also abound. Las Campanas specializes in Mexican food, Bella Trattoria serves pizza, pasta and paninis on the plaza, and the Mission Inn Restaurant is an all-purpose eatery (breakfast alfresco is delightful). Duane's Prime Steaks and Seafood Restaurant, named for the inn's current owner, is the flagship. Specialties include retro favorites such as steak Diane and chateaubriand for two; the finest ingredients (Scottish Loch Duart salmon; Hokkaido scallops) are prominently featured. On Sundays, locals turn out in droves for the Champagne jazz brunch, but if you're looking for a less frenetic experience, afternoon tea is served daily.

Outside the inn, downtown Riverside, with its art museums and architecturally significant buildings, is easily walkable. Don't miss Tio's Tacos. The family-owned taqueria and juice bar is surrounded by an acre of sculptures crafted from reclaimed glass and plastic bottles, encased in chicken wire and festooned with oyster shells. It's larger than life and unexpectedly fascinating, much like the Mission Inn itself. ◆

BOWLED OVER: The Shojo team has reinvented the Best Little Restaurant, mixing classics and inventive fusion dishes.

BETTER, STRONGER

BLR BY SHOJO BRIDGES THE OLD CHINATOWN WITH THE EMERGING ONE.

CHANGE IS COMING TO CHINATOWN, with luxury high-rise rentals shooting up like bamboo all over the old low-slung landscape. Bostonians look on nervously, wondering which beloved traditional Chinese restaurants will be steamrolled by gentrification. The news isn't all grim: Some restaurateurs are choosing evolution over migration or extinction. Consider the Best Little Restaurant, a nearly hidden basement spot near the Chinatown Gate, beloved for decades by food geeks for its brilliant Cantonese and Teochew cuisine at amazing prices, served in a tiny, dumpy room. Brendan and Brian Moy, scions of the China Pearl empire and the architects of Shojo, the neighborhood's hippest bar/restaurant, have reinvented Best Little. With the help of executive chef Mark O'Leary, who also helms Shojo's kitchen, the new BLR by Shojo boasts a shiny new look and a menu that tries to fuse the old and new Chinatowns as much as Eastern and Western flavors.

Some dishes here are straight-up Best Little classics, like delectable honey-garlic glazed pork ribs ($13), crisp and meaty in a sticky coating flavored with hoisin and soy sauce with a side of excellent rice sprinkled with black sesame seeds, and the similarly crisp, sweet, generous pile of chicken wings ($8 for eight). The Cantonese standby of whole fish in soy, ginger and scallion shows up as Best Little Trout ($19), here roasted rather than steamed, with a less-common choice of fish, filleted in the kitchen (head and tail left on), and boasting a subtle chili heat and perfect cooking. Chen's famous veggie mapo tofu ($12.50) brings the umami with mushrooms subbing for pork, its mala heat (Sichuan peppercorns and capsicum chilies) rounding out a traditional take on the Sichuan street-food favorite. Lionhead meatballs with pickled chilies ($9.50) seem spirited in from a traditional Shanghainese menu, featuring three big pork-meatball beauties in a dark glaze, crunchy with bits of water chestnut and zingy with fresh ginger. Dry-roasted garlic lends punch to very typical seasonal Chinese greens ($7). An echo of the early-'60s Hong Kong fervor for Western flavors crops up in honey-walnut shrimp ($16) with chunks of canned pineapple, walnuts and broccoli in a mayonnaise(!)-based sauce: bizarre-sounding but fantastic.

East/West fusion rears up deliciously in dishes like surf clam ceviche ($11), a gorgeous specimen of the oversized offshore species, its soy-lime vinaigrette lending piquancy and tenderness, tart goji berries and skinny rice noodles adding textural counterpoint. Salt and pepper smelts ($12) offer a Mediterranean gloss on the traditional batter-fried, chili-accented Cantonese dish, subbing adolescent smelts for the usual shrimp or squid, great by themselves but worth a dip in sharply mustardy aioli. Hawaiian beef short ribs ($16) in soy-pineapple marinade recall mid-century "Polynesian" American-Chinese fare: a big portion of thin slices of sweet and fatty beef, uncharacteristically bone-in. Szechuan Bolognese ($14) suggests what would happen were a Chengdu native to find himself in Northern Italy, saucing wide noodles with a mala-spicy, chunky ragù of pork and mushrooms.

Duck confit mooshu ($16) gives a Francophilic flavor to the Shandong stir-fry with honey-glazed shredded duck, leaves of Brussels sprouts and smear of hoisin, marred slightly by the wan pancakes provided for wrapping. By contrast, roasted bone marrow with a sweet soy glaze and funky XO sauce ($16) is offered for smearing onto terrific scallion pancakes, a smashing and original bit of fusion; the two fat bone halves yield enough marrow to maybe require extra pancakes ($3 each). House special soy sauce chicken ($12.50) reads like an elevated General Gau: a pile of popcorn chicken in an almost crunchy glaze of caramelized soy garlic. Braised Hong Kong steak ($18) is a rare flop, its oversalted, dryly stringy chuck steak and nearly raw string beans unsalvageable by good bone marrow gravy. Opt instead for vegetable-centric dishes like the wonderful fu-yu cucumber salad ($7) with tofu dressing, crunchy/soft pickled peanuts and a dusting of sesame seeds, or the mild and lovely chilled tofu-skin noodles ($8) with lots of mushrooms and roasted garlic in a chili vinaigrette, or the interesting Middle Eastern accent of wok-charred Chinese eggplant ($10) with tofu and tahini. Some cold lager would be fabulous with this food, but for now, BLR is limited to fine oolong or jasmine tea ($4) served in pretty porcelain pots and canned soft drinks ($3-$4) like sweet chrysanthemum tea.

Old Best Little fans will be wowed by the physical makeover: the newly exposed overhead beams and brick walls, the comfy new banquettes lining the 30-seat room, the glow of red-paper lanterns off gold-painted walls, the mahjong-tiled entryway, the old martial-arts movie posters and the black-and-white photos of the illicit Chinatown gambling dens that the space is cheekily meant to evoke. But as one longtime customer who mourned the old place's passing, with its fabulous pork-and-long-bean lettuce wraps and great cheap lobster dishes, I'm still grateful to see this new direction, one that neatly connects the older, more traditional Chinatown with a new one that can embrace the inventive but respectful fusion instincts of a talented Western chef like O'Leary. Boston's Chinatown will have to adapt to survive; BLR by Shojo exemplifies one very appealing evolutionary strategy. ◆

WALK OF LIFE

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

➜ Boston Medical Center patients hit the runway on June 23 during this year's Catwalk for BMC Cancer Care, donning looks made specially for them by six local designers, including Candice Wu and Lloyd Hall. Some 300 spectators filled the State Room, helping raise more than $350,000—and bringing the grand total of funds gathered for BMC's Cancer Care services during the course of the event's five years to more than $1 million.

➜ On June 11, the Museum of Fine Arts welcomed guests to its annual black-tie gala, The Summer Party, hosted by its young professional group. After a VIP get-together in the Koch Gallery, some 850 partygoers entered the "urban oasis" to dance and participate in a juried silent auction. The event raised more than $225,000, a portion of which benefited the Museum Council Special Exhibition Fund.

ASK CHERYL

Q: WHAT DO YOU RECOMMEND FOR TAKING CARE OF MY SKIN IN THE SUMMER?

A: Great question! You know my first answer is going to be to use a high quality sunscreen that contains 6 to 17% zinc oxide; I've written extensively about sunscreens, so I'll move along to other tips.

It's easy for our pores to get clogged during the hot, humid months so gentle exfoliation and cleansing is very important. I recommend a facial once a month for a thorough cleaning to prevent blackheads and breakouts. If you experience breakouts on your chest or back, it's also a good idea to have a "back facial" or microdermabrasion done on those areas.

For products, I love to see our clients incorporating a green tea serum or lotion, such as SkinHealth's Vital T, to help combat the effects of sun exposure and free radical damage.

INDIGNATION ★★★½
Starring Logan Lerman, Sarah Gadon, Linda Emond, Danny Burstein, Ben Rosenfield, Philip Ettinger, Pico Alexander, Noah Robbins and Tracy Letts. Written and directed by James Schamus, based on the novel by Philip Roth. At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

Movies / Brett Michel

ROTH DONE RIGHT

SCHAMUS LETS HIS ACTORS DO THE TALKING IN HIS EXPERT ADAPTATION OF INDIGNATION

A good deal of Philip Roth's piercing humor seeps under the surface of James Schamus' quite successful adaptation of Indignation, the Pulitzer Prize winner's 2008 novel (his 29th), but it's easier to detect in hindsight, since it's the bleakness of the film and the tragedy of its love story that permeates nearly every frame.

Nevertheless, as we're introduced to fresh-faced protagonist Marcus Messner (Logan Lerman), the teenaged son of a Jewish butcher in New Jersey circa 1951, we can gradually suss out the underlying humor as the mother of one Marcus' high school classmates inquires about our hero's upcoming move to Ohio. A dedicated student, the "clever boy" will be attending the fictional Winesburg College to receive a liberal arts education on a full scholarship. "How will you keep kosher there?" asks the woman (Joanne Baron), who has no idea that Marcus will soon be dining on escargots opposite a transfixing blond shiksa (Sarah Gadon) as he embraces his new life as a freethinking atheist. But then, this punchline is delivered by a grieving mother who's just lost her son in the Korean War, a fate that Marcus will avoid through his path of scholarship over combat, so we're not exactly in for belly laughs here.

No one's laughing less than Marcus' wildly overprotective father (Danny Burstein), whose compulsive concern for his son's well-being dips into paranoia, even if his son has dodged what seems like a certain death overseas. Still, perhaps the old man sees something we haven't yet, qualities that Gadon's Olivia Hutton, a transfer student from Mount Holyoke, picks up on after just one date with the inexperienced lad: "You are not a simple soul and you have no business being here," she tells Marcus. His crush on the gorgeous gentile disrupts his view of the world, no more so than when she asks him to make a detour on the way home from their date. There in the front seat of his roommate's prized 1939 LaSalle Touring Sedan, Olivia gives Marcus what we can assume is his first kiss, before silently opening his trousers and moving her lips below the stunned boy's belt.

Schamus has kept much of Roth's dialogue intact—and it embodies the film's title incredibly well.

Without knowing how to process her actions—or his emotions—Marcus' confusion drives him to withdraw from his routines, avoiding not only Olivia, but news from his mother (Linda Emond) regarding his father's own increasingly irrational behavior, which is spiraling out of control back home in Newark. Focusing on his studies and his job at the campus library, he finds time for little else, especially resenting his obligation to attend Winesburg's mandatory Wednesday chapel service. Tensions build to a head with his bunkmates, the Shakespeare-quoting Bertram Flusser (Ben Rosenfield) and buttoned-down Ron Foxman (Philip Ettinger), who can't stomach what transpired in his car. Fisticuffs erupt, forcing Marcus to find a new place to live.

Rejecting the overtures of Sonny Cottler (Pico Alexander), the charismatic president of Winesburg's lone Jewish fraternity, the independent Marcus instead moves into a dilapidated single room, a development that prompts the film's stunning centerpiece: Marcus' tête-à-tête with his bête noire, Dean Hawes Caudwell. Played by Pulitzer-winning playwright Tracy Letts, Winesburg's dean of men is an imposing figure in a three-piece suit, his calm demeanor masking a McCarthyist streak.

This picture marks the directorial debut for Schamus, the former head of Focus Features and a longtime independent film producer and screenwriter known for his collaborations with Oscar-winning director Ang Lee. It's clear that his time with Lee has been well spent. Schamus is a natural, and he's committed to a style that is very generous to his actors, as demonstrated by the volatile exchange between Marcus and Caudwell, a two-person scene that takes up 16 minutes of screen time, with very few cuts. The 24-year-old Lerman matches the 51-year-old Letts beat for beat as the industrious freshman answers the dean's assertion that assimilation will be the key to a bright future, angrily arguing that social and religious obligations are being unfairly imposed upon him. Caudwell responds with condescending praise, saying Marcus is "destined to be an outstanding lawyer," which only makes the teenager lose more of his composure, sweat increasingly beading on his brow. It's a talky scene in a talky movie—Schamus has kept much of Roth's dialogue intact—and it embodies the film's title incredibly well.

The next time we see Marcus, he's lying in a hospital bed, where he'll soon be visited by the two women in his life—Olivia and his mother. All three characters will be presented with choices, and the resulting decisions will change them forever. Roth being Roth, things probably won't end well, for anyone. Although Schamus has brought much of himself to the film, he hasn't missed the overriding conclusion of Roth's novel, where he observes "the terrible, the incomprehensible way one's most banal, incidental, even comical choices achieve the most disproportionate result." ◆

BLACKBERRY SMOKE play Blue Hills Bank Pavilion on Aug. 13.

Music / Paul Robicheau

TRUE GRIT

SOUTHERN JOURNEYMEN BLOW SMOKE BETWEEN ROCK AND COUNTRY.

When he was 11 years old, Charlie Gray rode his bicycle down to a mud pit near his Alabama home, where teenagers flipped their four-wheelers into the soupy red clay. "There were always valuables that people left behind," he says, "and I found this cassette that was spilled out on the ground. I picked it up and wiped the mud off, and it said 'Aerosmith—Rocks.' "

When he got home and played that tape of Aerosmith's fourth album and "Back in the Saddle" blasted from the speakers, the future frontman of Atlanta rockers Blackberry Smoke realized that he'd discovered something quite different from his dad's bluegrass or the Bob Dylan and Rolling Stones records that his mom loved.

Now going by his hometown nickname Charlie Starr, the singer/guitarist covered Aerosmith songs with Blackberry Smoke during past visits to Boston—and he'll have another shot when his band opens for Gov't Mule at Blue Hills Bank Pavilion on Aug. 13.

While it'll be their first tour together, Blackberry Smoke has played before with Gov't Mule, fronted by Carolina-bred former Allman Brothers counterpart Warren Haynes. Two summers ago at the Pavilion, Starr joined Haynes' band on a Marshall Tucker Band cover.

"We're definitely kindred spirits," says Starr, 42. "All this music that we play is coming from the same place, from the blues and hillbilly music and British rock 'n' roll. It's all tangled up in American rock 'n' roll, which is Southern music anyway."

At another end of the spectrum, however, Blackberry Smoke debuted at No. 1 on the country charts with their 2015 album Holding All the Roses, toured with the Zac Brown Band and recorded a song with country icon George Jones.

"The lines are so blurry," Starr says of rock and country, suggesting that Southern rockers Lynyrd Skynyrd would be considered country if their '70s music came out today. "You turn on country radio now and you hear gritty guitars and big drums. You don't hear pedal steel and fiddle and weepy cheating songs anymore."

"You turn on country radio now and you hear gritty guitars and big drums. You don't hear pedal steel and fiddle and weepy cheating songs anymore."

Starr says his bluegrass-steeped father taught him guitar—"It was just understood, 'Well, you're going to play something,' "—and that partly influenced his style. "But it doesn't make us a country band," he says. "I've always been a little confused."

Still, Starr says he's glad to draw fans from the country camp, and Blackberry Smoke's mostly word-of-mouth climb since its formation in 2000 included some exposure from SiriusXM's Outlaw Country channel rather than terrestrial radio. "People aren't selling records like they used to," Starr says, "but then we turned around, this little band from Georgia, and made a record that debuted at No. 1."

It was a long time coming for him. "There were limited options where I grew up, and you really only played in bars and cover bands 'cause there were no venues where people would go to hear original music," says Starr, who—like other rural musicians from that region—moved to Atlanta, which was 80 miles away.

He and his Blackberry Smoke mates—guitarist Paul Jackson, keyboardist Brandon Still, bassist Richard Turner and his drummer brother Brit—gave early thoughts to what type of music would best suit the market, Starr says. They settled for chunky, mid-tempo rock 'n' roll somewhat akin to Atlanta predecessors the Black Crowes, with more of a country tinge. "We dedicated ourselves to this a long time ago," he says. "We love what we do and we loved it when we played for nobody."

There was plenty of that: Audiences ranged from nobody to 500 people for the band's first decade, he says. "We first saw a growth in our fan base in Wisconsin and Michigan, and we would come home to Atlanta and couldn't sell 30 tickets."

Now that's changed, from Atlanta to Boston, where the group headlined the House of Blues on its past two visits, once covering Aerosmith's apt "Chip Away the Stone." And Blackberry Smoke is poised to keep rising based on "Waiting for the Thunder," a chord-whipped advance single from Like an Arrow, due out in October. "This new one might be more akin to our first album," Starr says. "It's just gnarly." ◆

THE PURGE

MY SOMEWHAT ABRIDGED, SORTA-MAGICAL ADVENTURE IN TIDYING UP.

Are you messy? Disheveled? Constantly contending with overflowing drawers and chaotic closets? Marie Kondo wants to help. If you've not heard of her, she's a Japanese woman who wrote a book entitled The Life-Changing Magic of Tidying Up: The Japanese Art of Decluttering and Organizing. People are paying attention to this book because it combines boring old organizing with a healthy dose of complete insanity. Plenty of organizational experts will tell you to throw out your old clothes. But only Marie Kondo encourages you to commune with them on a deeper spiritual level before hucking them in the Goodwill bag. And in terms of devotion to material minimalism, Marie Kondo makes the High Sparrow look like Imelda Marcos.

Kondo's method, branded KonMari, encompasses more than just clothes. It's meant to help you get your entire life in order via a ruthless (and ongoing) purge of extraneous items. But you start with clothes. I know this because I read a bunch of book reviews before downloading the new step-by-step app. I didn't actually buy the book, though, because then I'd just have another book to get rid of.

Between the app and my methodological Dumpster-dive, I piece together a sort of KonMari 101. You dump all your clothes in a pile, then pick up each item and take a moment to decide whether it sparks joy. If it doesn't, you thank it for the good times and then ditch it. The stuff you keep gets folded according to a technique that renders your shirts about the size of an index card. Now you're on your way to making order from anarchy, raging against the entropy of your sock drawer.

I fire up the app and learn that Step 1 is to take a "before" photo of all your clothes. Only after piling my entire wardrobe on my bed do I realize that this should really be Step 2. Step 1 is to not put your phone on the bed before you bury it in a mountain of clothes.

As I'm forced to ponder each individual item, sartorial revelations pour forth. For instance, I guess I hate pockets on the front of button-downs. I'd never really thought about it, but the shirt pocket presents a kind of distracting asymmetry. And it's functionally useless, because I'm not carrying pens for my job at NASA in 1965. Thus the shirt pocket is ornamental, and is there a lamer form of frippery than a shirt pocket? If your shirt has 15 pockets, you're owning it (see Michael Jackson; zippers). If it only has one, there's something sad about that. Like it's there to hold your list of friends, but you don't have any.

I'm also done with boxers, if for no other reason than because boxers and shorts are a risky combo. Speaking of risk, I also jettison the tighty-whities that I bought for a last-minute "Tom Cruise in Risky Business" Halloween costume. Confronted by the entirety of my wardrobe, I'd estimate that roughly 30 percent of it falls under the category of "potential Halloween costume." The one item that actually is a costume—a spacesuit with a fake butt sticking out the back and a nametag that says "Captain Bud Tocks"—goes back in the closet. There's always room for you in my life, Captain Tocks.

But not for the disturbing foot gloves known as Vibram FiveFingers. Nor for a pair of Levi's with a strange wash that I'd describe as "rivulets of 2003" (though I do get a nice charge out of finding $8 in the pocket). And see ya later, Skechers that somehow make me feel like Boris Karloff. Arrrr! Put down your pitchforks, villagers! These shoes are just really square or have too much padding or something!

Step 1 is to not put your phone on the bed before you bury it in a mountain of clothes.

I also ditch the perfectly broken-in college sweatshirt that my friend Elliot gave me a few years ago. When he handed it over, he said, "I got this from my neighbor." I was about to thank him for this thoughtful gift when he added, "Who just died." Sayonara, haunted hoodie.

While the Goodwill pile grows ever higher, there are certain items that I keep even though cold rationality says to move on. For example, there's an H&M hooded pullover that I've always envisioned wearing while having cocktails with my friends Chad and Claudia. But it's never going to happen. I don't have friends named Chad and Claudia. But the idea of that brings me joy, so I KonMari that sucker into a tight little square and place it behind the velvet rope of the keeper area.

By the time I'm finished, the reject heap dwarfs my severely edited stack of crispy folded clothes. My wife, Heather, walks in and points out that the shirt I'm wearing has a stain on the sleeve that bothers her every time she sees me wear it, so I triumphantly pull off the offending garment and toss it.

It's exciting, this KonMari purge. We decide to head out for dinner to celebrate. I open my dresser and realize I've got nothing to wear. ◆

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I love my husband, but as great a guy as he is, he is also extremely talkative. I mean like when someone asks him how he's doing, he launches into a 20-minute conversation with every little detail of his work, health, money concerns, etc. Sometimes people just want to hear "I'm fine!" and not a life story. How can I get him to shorten up his conversations and not bore people to death? I don't want to hurt his feelings, but I don't want to lose friends and family when they start avoiding us! I suffer from this problem myself, only it's never about health or money. It's just loving to tell stories about seemingly everything. At least once a day I say to myself, "Shut the hell up." So you have to solve this problem with some humor. Everyone asks us all the time, "How you doin'?" Or "How are you?" Never tell them the truth. They do not really care. Tell your husband this and advise him to answer "How are ya?" by saying things like "Every day's an adventure," or "My doctor tells me that I'm growing a second head." The answers are short and provocative. And they don't leave room for long answers from the other people. People have problems of their own. They don't want to dwell on yours. I have friends, a married couple, who have a rule when they go out for dinner with friends: Whoever first mentions health issues has to pay for dinner. Or you can just tell your husband to shut up. Works for me.

My wife is awesome but she is constantly on her iPhone. I mean at the table, at dinner, in the car... I think I'm starting to get jealous of the smartphone. Every morning she's on it before she's out of bed... help! Sometimes I think that marriage is an unnatural act. To be successful over a long term, all kinds of compromise is necessary. The great comedian Lenny Bruce used to tell a story about his wife catching him one day in the midst of an unnatural act with a chicken. They had a huge fight but eventually calmed down and went back to their daily routines. A week later, Bruce brought a bag of dirty laundry to his wife and said, "Could you please wash these things?"

She looked at him and paused, then said, "Let the chicken do your laundry."

Lots of petty annoyances crop up in all relationships. So I suggest you begin doing several things that may prove equally annoying to her. Like always leaving some article of clothing on the floor before you head off to work, or always leaving the toilet seat up. Or suddenly starting to whistle when you're around the house and she's asking you something. When she can't stand it anymore and calls you on it, you can bring up the subject of compromise and move toward modifying your behavior if she'll modify hers.

Living with someone else is always a game. Sometimes it's like chess, sometimes checkers. And sometimes Pokémon.

I've been asked to play golf with my boss in a one-day tournament at his club. I know it's an honor to be invited. And I am a pretty good player. But my game can be very unpredictable, and I know my boss has invited two of our biggest clients to play as well. The problem is I told my boss that I was an excellent golfer, and I'm sure he wants me around to impress his clients. I'm having trouble sleeping, I'm so nervous about this outing. What do you suggest, other than taking tranquilizers? It's a very tough thing to live up to a legend you've created for yourself, especially about golf, the ultimate head game. But remember, when it's client golf, it's all about your parent company and showing the customers what a congenial guy you are and how much you love your job. There's an old cliché, "You should never beat your boss at golf," but that's really not true. They like to show off their special employees, thinking it reflects well on them. You've kind of screwed yourself by pretending you're a fine player. So when playing, be self-deprecating and as charming as you can be. Also be particularly complimentary to the good points of the clients' game; make them have a memorable day. Tell a few amusing stories about your company to humanize it. Almost everyone you ever play golf with will say, "I basically stink. Can't hit irons, can't putt, have the shanks out of nowhere." And the clients will say in this case, "That's why it's a four-letter word," and other hoary, timeless reactions.

But golf is a great judge of character. You can learn a lot about people in the course of almost four hours. So be a gentleman. Be congenial. Make your boss proud to have you for a companion, even if you don't break 90. You'll learn a lot about how business is done on the golf courses of life, and even more about how you react under pressure to perform. ◆

People have problems of their own. They don't want to dwell on yours.

STAHL TACTICS

THE NEWSWOMAN REFLECTS ON RONALD REAGAN, WAR ZONES AND CHASING AFTER GRANDKIDS.

VETERAN CBS REPORTER LESLEY STAHL, 74, WAS born in Lynn and raised in Swampscott. An honors graduate of Wheaton College, she began her career at WHDH-TV (Ch. 7) before joining CBS News in 1972. She covered Watergate and served as the White House correspondent during three administrations. She was the moderator of Face the Nation from 1983 to 1991, and she has been a correspondent for 60 Minutes for 25 years. She has written two books, Reporting Live and her latest, Becoming Grandma: The Joys and Science of the New Grandparenting, out this year. She has won numerous Emmys, the Edward R. Murrow award and countless other accolades. She lives with her husband, author Aaron Latham, in New York and has two grandchildren.

JONATHAN SOROFF: What are your top three tips for new grandparents?
LESLEY STAHL: Number one: I don't give tips. I'm the last person on the planet to give advice. The book was an attempt to understand the unbelievably deep and unexpected emotions that I had when my grandchildren were born. I wanted to be a grandmother from the time I was 40, but the depth of what happened to me was unexpected.

What do your grandkids call you? Lolly. I tried to involve myself in naming my grandkids, and every name I proposed was shot down before the last syllable was out of my mouth. Then I said to my daughter, "They can call me Granny," but my daughter said, "Absolutely not." So my mother's name was Dolly, and Lolly's pretty close. Plus, it's easy for the kids to say. And my husband Aaron said, "Well, if you're going to be Lolly, then I'm going to be Pop." So there you have it.

Are your grandkids exhausting? Sometimes, yes. I'm an older grandmother. There's kind of a demarcation. If you have grandkids in your 50s, your whole attitude is very different. You think you're too young and that grandparent means you're old. There's a whole lot that comes into play that tempers the excitement. But if, like my daughter, your children make you wait, you're incredibly grateful, and your emotions are free to burst forth like fireworks. The corresponding problem is that you're older and running after them is very hard. They want to go to the park or the beach. I've found ways around it, though. I choose activities that aren't that exhausting. I'm the reading lady.

Current state of journalism in this country? I think we're in bad shape for a number of reasons. The main one is that the public doesn't seem to trust us or hold us in any state of esteem. I came into the business under Walter Cronkite, who was known as the most trusted man in America. There's a depressing reason for the change. The mainstream media has tried to be balanced, but the public feel we have an agenda. And obviously, another reason we've lost some of our shine is technology. First, there was cable. Then the internet. Social media. And each new technology chipped away at our armor.

As White House correspondent, which president did you have the best relationship with? Well, I covered three: Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush. I think Bush was the one I had the best personal relationship with. That wasn't true of the staff. I had the best staff relationship with Reagan's people. wife and mother died at basically the same time. He kind of fell apart and put himself back together, and I think that's a key ingredient to leadership.

Figure from history you'd like to interview? I'll stick to my lifetime. One I actually did get to do, but it was a terrible interview, was Nancy Reagan. I would have liked an opportunity to see if all her armor would melt away. I always believed that she became a very powerful force in her husband's second term. I do think he began to fail, and she was protecting him from having anyone discover it. That's just my belief, and I'd love to have interviewed her about that.

Most memorable interview? I guess Margaret Thatcher. She was so excitingly intelligent. She was a brilliant tactician, even in an interview. Maybe British prime ministers are adept at the game of answering questions, because of Question Time. But she really raked me over the coals. She kinda slapped me around a bit. I was asking questions she didn't want to answer, and she just kinda came down on top of my head. And yet it's one of my favorite interviews because even though I lost the duel, I was so challenged. Maybe I'm just a glutton for punishment, but it was a pleasure to interview her.

"She really raked me over the coals.... Yet it's one of my favorite interviews because even though I lost the duel, I was so challenged."

President you wish you had met? I guess anybody would say Lincoln, but that's the obvious choice. I think maybe Teddy Roosevelt. That energy, the spark in him, his personal tragedies. Henry Kissinger once told me that no one should be president unless they've had a tragedy in their life that they overcame. And Teddy Roosevelt's

The first time you won an Emmy, did you sleep with it? [Laughs.] Well, you know, they're kind of pointy and hard. It's an interesting thing about awards. I like to have them. They're lovely. But I've never been too into it.

Most physical danger you've been in for a story? Let me preface this by saying I didn't know I was in physical danger at the time. I kind of blithely agreed to travel with [Iraqi National Congress founder] Ahmed Chalabi to Tikrit when the war was still going on. This was insanity. I look back and say, "What were you thinking?" We debated whether or not to go and decided to do it, and I didn't feel any sense of danger until we got back and I saw all the reports of cars that had been on the same roads and been blown up. I've never been shot at. I've never deliberately gone into a war zone. But that one was sort of scary in retrospect.

What are your news sources? I read three newspapers every day: The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal and The Washington Post. They are delivered to my house. If I'm somewhere else, I read them on my Kindle. I read Time magazine every week, although it seems to be biweekly now. I read The Atlantic, and I read The New Yorker. I read Politico online, and that's it for the regulars. I hook into CNN on my iPhone, and now CBS has something called CBSN that's a streaming site for CBS News. It's very new and it's fantastic.

So what are you going to do when you baby-sit your grandchildren today? Well, we were going to the movies, but it's too late. So—don't tell their mother—but I'm going to take them for ice cream, and I'm reading Alice Through the Looking Glass, so we'll try to get through that. ◆

XANDER BOGAERTS

This was supposed to be David Ortiz's season. And while the 40-year-old slugger has launched a farewell tour worthy of a legend, this Red Sox season has also turned into the Year of Youth. Joining Ortiz as starters on this year's All-Star team were 20-somethings Xander Bogaerts, Mookie Betts and Jackie Bradley Jr. Bogaerts, the 23-year-old shortstop and Aruba native, made his mark as a fresh-faced phenom during the team's 2013 title run. He's shown marked improvement each season since, blossoming this year as one of the best players in the American League. He's part of a wave of young position-player talent that's taken up residence at Fenway Park, the likes of which arguably haven't been seen since the '70s. "It's a fun time for the organization. When I came up, I was one of the first young ones to come up, and Mookie and [others] followed," Bogaerts says. The mix of speed and strength that those young players possess has been a major reason the Sox are leading the league in runs scored. Now Bogaerts is hoping that the young foundation's regular-season statistical success will be followed by a postseason triumph. "We won my first year, and I was like, 'Wow, is it this easy?' Because I came up and won right away," he says. "It's been kind of hard after that. But you gotta perform year in and year out to be one of the top teams at the end. Second place, nobody remembers that." The wiry infielder knows that winning won't come easy, which is why he's focused on improving his defense and staying physically fit during a season full of long road trips and day games after night games. It's all part of his effort to avoid even one bad day on the field. "The expectations for the city and the team are so high here. It's win-win-win-win mode every day. It doesn't matter if you have an ace on the mound for the other team or if they're on a 9-game losing streak. It's fun when you come to the park every day, and you know you have that bit of pressure on yourself." If all goes well, Ortiz will be passing the mantle to the young Sox this October. And perhaps Bogaerts & Co. will be handing him another World Series ring.

DANIELLA PIERSON

"I love staying updated on trending topics ... but was frustrated at the amount of websites I had to check daily to be in the know," says Daniella Pierson, 21. "I realized that other busy women probably felt the same." So in her sophomore year at Boston University, Pierson founded The Newsette, a daily "mini-magazine" of aggregated style, entertainment and fashion news. She emailed more than 400 friends, inviting them to subscribe. "Slowly I would see people in the BU Starbucks reading The Newsette who I didn't recognize," Pierson recalls. Fewer than two years in, The Newsette has readers in more than 100 countries, from age 14 to 65. "Now that we have an ambassador program with over 200 girls from around the world, we have been able to expand our audience globally." Pierson wakes up at 6 am every weekday to write the mini-magazine and answer reader emails, balancing her growing business with academic and social obligations—but her hard work is paying off. "The most rewarding experience I've had throughout this journey was when I announced I was looking for summer interns ... and received over 100 applications in just one day," she says. "That moment made me realize that I was actually doing something that people believed in."

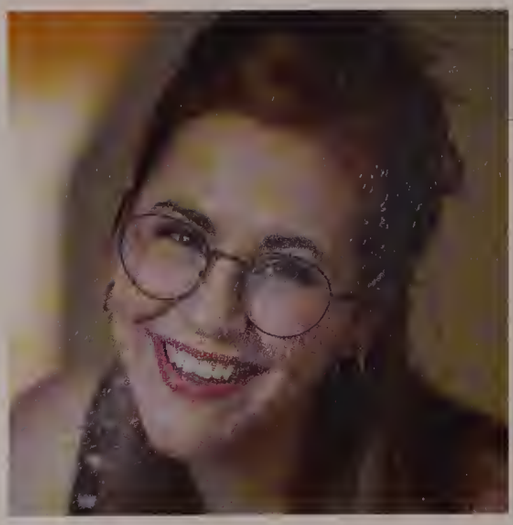
KEVIN CLARK

Kevin Clark is on the move. The 25-year-old Berklee alum is the mind behind Point Motion, a motion-controlled device that translates movement into sound and effects. He created the prototype in the one-bedroom apartment he shared with two roommates; now the product is in the hands of early adopters and ready for release this fall. "Guitar players won't need to worry about effect pedals, and dancers can orchestrate entire pieces of music with their body," Clark explains. "We already have DJs in Switzerland using this to control lights and sounds in their live performances, and dancers at Boston Conservatory dancing the music, rather than dancing to it." He's also been working with medical institutions to use Point Motion to help people with autism and Alzheimer's, donating $40,000 worth of Point Motion products to schools, clinics and hospitals across the country. Work to incorporate sign language technology for use at retail checkout stations is ongoing, but Clark says this is just the beginning: "By mid-2017, we will have integrated facial recognition and hand-tracking to have established the most universal and intuitive motion-control system in history."

JONATHAN TEJEDA

"Seeing something you created in large scale, in public, is huge," says graphic designer Jonathan Tejeda. At age 18, he's already seen his work cover outsized canvases, from a Boston Properties commission at 100 Federal St., which had him adorning a garage entrance with a 1935 Buick Y-Job's curvy contours, to a massive mural for Gillette's HQ that features images of the the Citgo sign and other local landmarks. Tejeda tackled such projects as an apprentice at a local nonprofit that celebrated its own 25th anniversary this year, Artists for Humanity, which provides mentoring and paid employment to under-resourced teens. It's helped Tejeda fill his portfolio with work for other big-name clients, including Converse, the MBTA, Barnes & Noble and several universities; right now, he's working on T-shirt designs for Yale—and, he says, looking forward to starting college himself this fall at MassArt, where he hopes to dive into photography and filmmaking as well as design. "I'm just really excited to learn a whole bunch of new art forms."

MAXWELL PERRY



Maxwell Perry, 19, has always had a knack for entrepreneurship—he started a screen-printed T-shirt biz in middle school, then moved on to hawking homemade beef jerky in high school. Now, as a Babson College sophomore, he's incorporating philanthropy as the founder of Beantown Blankets, a nonprofit that's partnered with Father Bill's shelters in Quincy and Brockton to give a blanket to a homeless person for every purchase. "Since launching the first week of June, our organization has provided 125 blankets to the homeless," Perry says, noting that the Fall River-produced blankets are waterproof on one side and fleece on the other. "We hope to donate well over 1,000 by Christmas."

JAYLEN BROWN

Nineteen-year-old Jaylen Brown—who took a graduate-level class during his freshman year at UC Berkeley—was reportedly labeled "too smart" by one not-too-bright NBA executive earlier this year, and he steers straight into the intellectual label when talking about his transition from playing college basketball to playing professionally for the Boston Celtics: "It's like going from algebra to calculus." Brown got his first taste of NBA action during summer exhibition games, and while he came away from that experience asking for patience in his game, he impressed enough onlookers to be named to the All-NBA Summer League second team. It was the latest step in a basketball career that Brown can't even recall beginning. "I don't feel like I chose to play basketball, but I feel like basketball kind of chose me," he says. "I don't know when I started working early, or when I started waking up in the middle of the night to watch film. It kind of just happened." The 6-foot-7-inch forward was the Celtics' highest draft pick in nearly two decades, creating outsized expectations that he could eventually be the superstar playmaker the team has chased since its rebuilding process began in 2013. And the confident Brown isn't shying away from that label either: "I have to continue to develop, but naturally my playmaking ability is my best attribute."

JAYLEN BROWN BRIAN BABINEAU

LIZZIE MILANOVICH

Emerson alum Lizzie Milanovich's first professional show after college was the scariest piece she's worked on, and not because of its mouthful of a title: It Felt Empty When the Heart Went at First But It Is Alright Now. "It was a two-and-a-half-hour play, most of which I was on stage by myself, and I had to do the whole thing in a Serbian accent," the 24-year-old says of Theatre on Fire's raw drama, which earned her rave reviews. Since then, the actor and writer has seen her own words come to life on stage in Fresh Ink Theatre Company's December production of It's Not About My Mother, originally written for her senior thesis, and appeared in Brown Box Theatre Project's touring production of The Taming of the Shrew. "Brown Box brings theater to people and communities that would normally not have access to theater, and working with them is some of the most rewarding work I've ever done." The rising star also relished her most recent role in From the Sea, To Somewhere Else, a new work that hit the Boston Center for the Arts in July. "I played a mermaid! Which, like, embarrassingly was a dream come true," Milanovich says. "For me, it was an identity play that sort of ended with the idea that your identity isn't something that must be stagnant. It can and will be a thing that ebbs and flows as time goes on and you grow up. Which is true for humans, too, I think, not just mermaids."

NEIL QUIGLEY

Most young Bostonians look forward to their 21st birthdays. But Neil Quigley, who graduated from the UK's Brewlab at 19, really couldn't wait. Unable to find a job as a brewer because of his age, the Newton native traveled to Canada when he was 20 to further his beer education, eventually becoming the world's "unofficial youngest cicerone"—a sort of beer sommelier—at 20 years and 8 months old. Quigley went on to draw accolades behind the bar at the late Ames Street Deli; now he's at Jody Adams' buzzy new Back Bay spot Porto. He's also in charge of flavor development for the Cape Cod-based Farmer Willie's Alcoholic Ginger Beer. At 21, he's moved past some of his age-related challenges and is looking forward to a bright future in the beverage industry. "I've been laughed at and looked at sideways more than I've been complimented for my age, but I think it helped me weed out the unsupportive, close-minded people, and it helped me find mentors that cared and were willing to take a chance on me," he says. "Being able to work with some of the best people in the industry is what excites me the most. I'm always looking to innovate and learn from others, and my current job is a great opportunity to do just that."

MAX WALLACK

Sure, Max Wallack has all the credentials of a whiz kid. He graduated summa cum laude from Boston University at 18, and the 20-year-old will begin his second year at Harvard Medical School this fall. But his efforts outside the classroom are even more impressive. While helping to care for his great-grandmother, who suffered from Alzheimer's disease, the Natick native saw how using puzzles could calm dementia patients and provide other mental benefits. So he founded PuzzlesToRemember, which has supplied more than 63,000 puzzles to more than 3,800 nursing facilities around the world. "I found that most available puzzles had too many small pieces to be beneficial," he says. "That is why I contacted Springbok to produce puzzles with 36 very large-sized, colorful pieces, with memory-provoking themes." Wallack has also co-authored a book explaining Alzheimer's disease to children, and he's volunteered thousands of hours in research in the field. "I learned very early on how devastating this disease is to both patients and their families." Now, he's making it his life's work to eliminate as much of that devastation as possible.

BRANICK WEIX

As a kid, Boston College sophomore Branick Weix would ask for old radios and TVs for his birthday—just so he could take them apart. Once he got to high school, he translated that love for tech into his SkyLink Productions drone business, taking aerial photographs and video for marketing purposes, starting with a nearby golf course. "I spent a lot of my senior year in high school cold-calling potential clients and trying to diversify my work portfolio," the 19-year-old explains. He soon connected with Minnesota nonprofit Seeds of Change and the Leatherback Trust, which tapped him to bring his drones to Costa Rica to help track female sea turtle nesting without disturbing the natural environment. "In what would take a person three to four hours to accomplish, we finished in less than 11 minutes with the drone," he recalls. "Some people may look at it as technology encroaching everywhere, but I think that as technology gets cheaper, faster and smaller, we'll see it being used in new and innovative ways to help preserve and enhance those natural and remote areas."

EMMA JOHNSON

Boston University sophomore Emma Johnson hit the jackpot early with her jewelry and accessories line Em John, scoring a feature in O, The Oprah Magazine. "That's when I knew Em John wasn't simply a little hobby with teenage friends," the 19-year-old says. "This was, and is, a real business." Her designs may be all about fun—think colorful emoji keychains, tassel necklaces and glittery charm bracelets—but the business has serious benefits: Johnson is on track to graduate without debt. It's a goal she set while she was still in high school. "Too often we think we have to wait for the perfect moment, or we assume we don't know enough to possibly make it work," she says. "But sometimes just having the idea and the hustle is good enough."

DAVID PASTRNAK

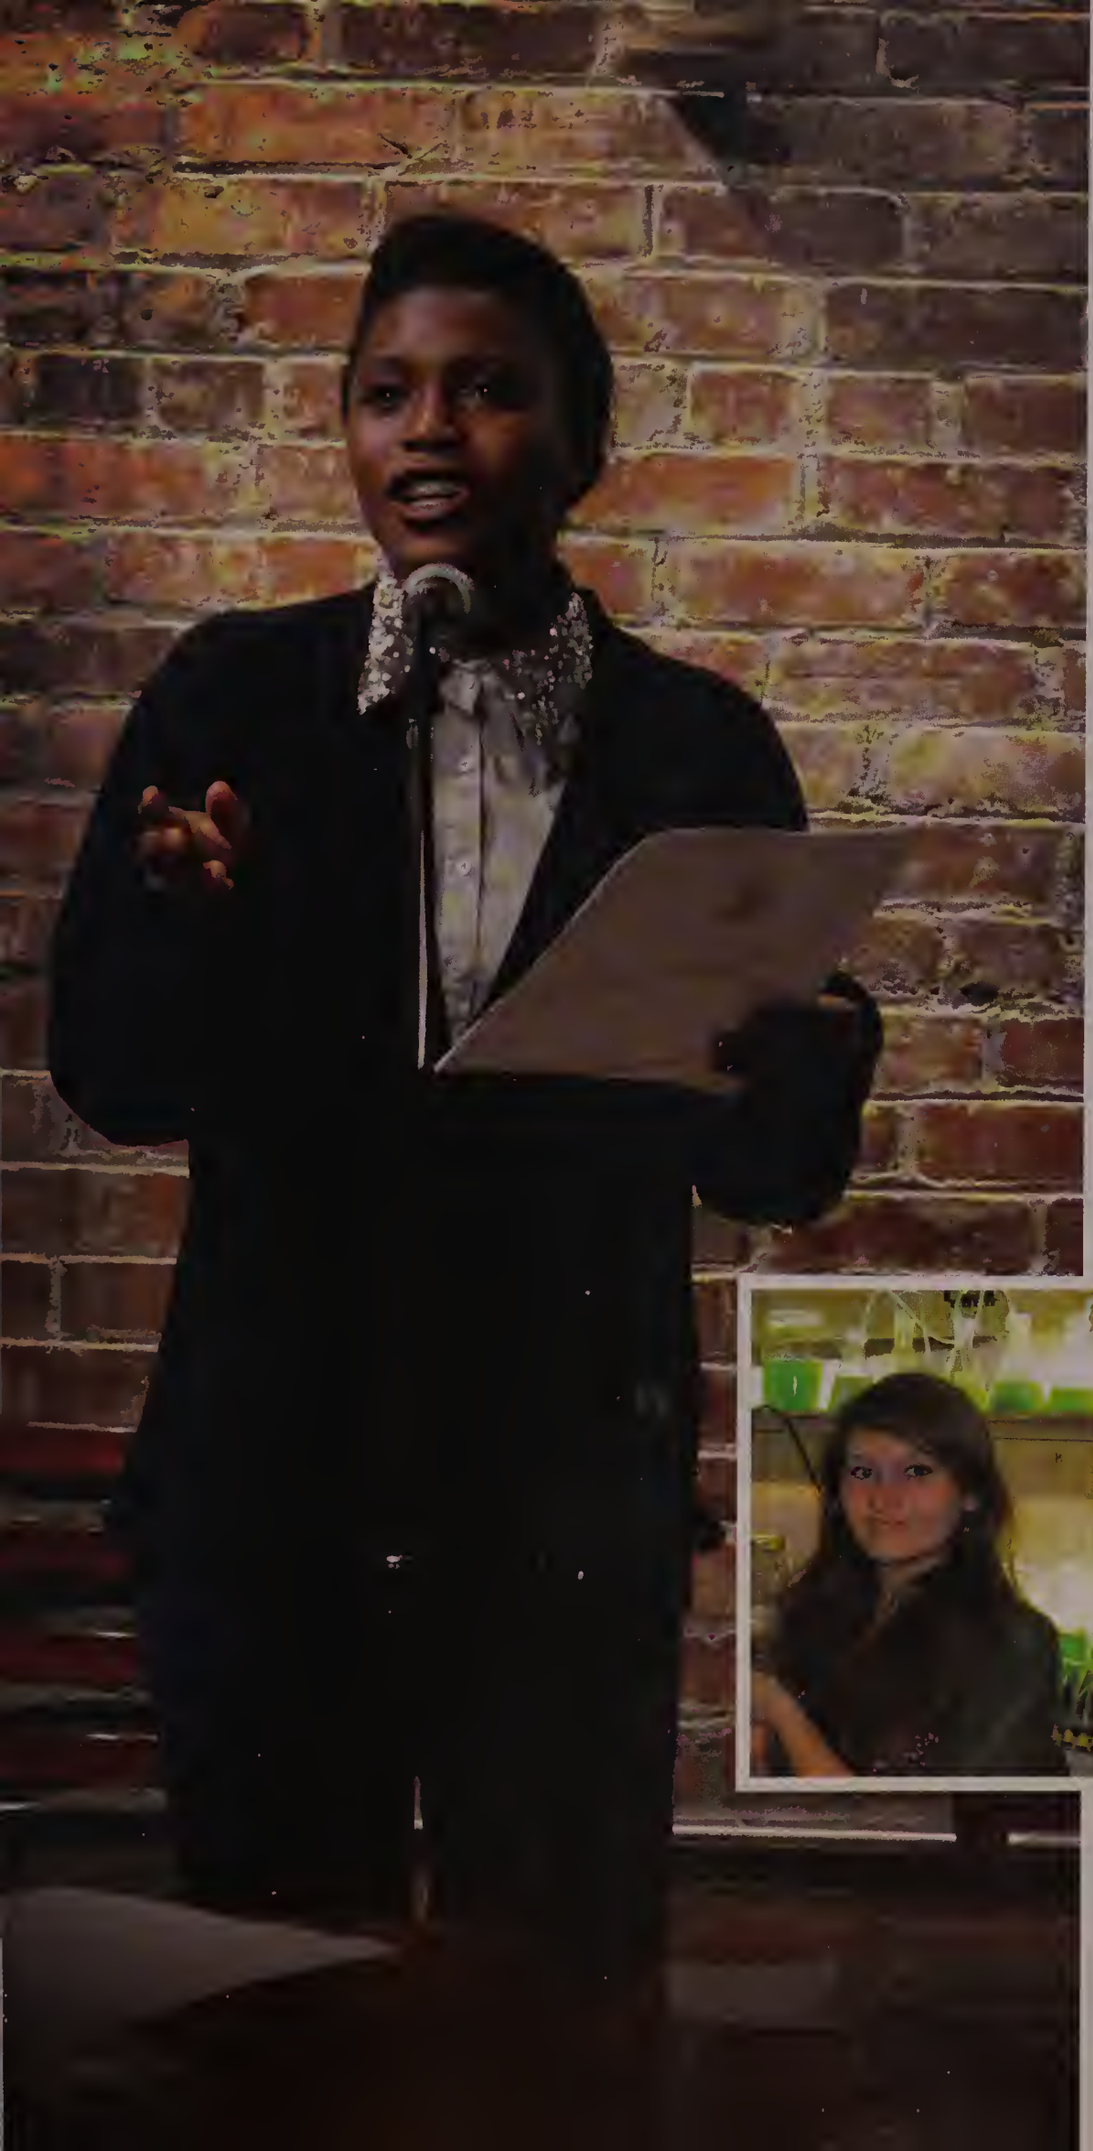
When first-round draft pick David Pastrnak took to the ice in 2014, the Czech import was the youngest skater in the NHL—and he quickly became the youngest player in Bruins' history to net a penalty shot and the franchise's first teenager to score a regular season overtime goal. Pastrnak wrapped up the second half of his rookie campaign as the team's leading scorer, with 26 points in 41 games, and went on to suit up for five more games in his sophomore year, scoring as many more goals. Says the 20-year-old, "You get smarter every game you play, with or against star players from around the league." Coming into his third season, the winger brings his lightning speed, his dangerous shot (one that drew notice after making opposing goalie Cam Ward's water bottle explode) and a newly learned lesson: "Every single game of those 82 is important," notes Pastrnak, pointing out the team missed out on the playoffs the past two seasons by two points or less. "Every point matters."

DAVID PASTRNAK: BRIAN BABINEAU; BRANICK WEIX; NICOLE ANDERSON

JENNIFER MARIA AND XAVIER SAVAGE

Keeping up with a college course load and a full-time job is only the half of it for Jennifer Maria, 24, and Xavier Savage, 20. The Dorchester natives are both enrolled at UMass Boston—and they both report to City Hall's head honcho. Previously a liaison for the Latino community, Maria now travels by Mayor Walsh's side as a special assistant. "A typical day for me would be attending all kinds of events with the mayor and responding to any requests or concerns from constituents," says the sociology major. And as the advance person for the mayor, Savage is charged with putting together his brief book, the no-walk-in-the-park task of finding parking for foreign diplomats and the all-important job of keeping Walsh on time. As Savage—who also volunteers as a youth leader at his church and works with the All Dorchester Sports League—explains, "My job in its most basic form is to make sure the mayor has everything and knows everything he needs to know to have a smooth day."

CASEY MCQUILLEN



Andover native Casey McQuillen made it to Hollywood on the 2014 season of American Idol, but her time in the spotlight on the hit show isn't the 23-year-old's proudest accomplishment. That distinction goes to the 2016 Berklee grad's "You Matter" tour, which combines music and motivational speaking to promote an anti-bullying message to middle and high school students across the country. The project got its start when an old teacher invited McQuillen to guest-teach a songwriting class, for which she chose three songs she'd written in middle school that dealt with bullying and self-confidence (the singer/songwriter says she's long battled anxiety). "I wanted the subject matter to be relevant to the students," she says. "The students loved the program, and I was invited back to perform for the whole grade, and then the entire school, and then the neighboring middle schools." Word continued to spread with help from her Idol fame; now McQuillen has brought her program to more than 100 schools, performing for more than 25,000 students. "I want to use my platform to connect with people, share stories and give a voice to those who think they don't matter," she says. "That's the point: You matter!"

TOM COBURN

"College dropout" is far from synonymous with failure in the startup scene, and Tom Coburn joined the ranks of Gates, Jobs and Zuckerberg when he abandoned Boston College—and plans for med school—to found digital marketing platform Jebbit. The idea came when he was waiting for a flight and opened Hulu on his laptop; an ad started playing, and he automatically opened Facebook in another tab while he waited for it to end. "But instead of scrolling through my newsfeed, I realized, a brand had spent money to show me something, and I couldn't even think of the company, let alone the product," the now 25-year-old says. "I wanted to create the most efficient way for a company or organization to understand, educate and influence its audience on a one-to-one basis." Coburn and his team had to pitch their product to more than 500 businesses before securing their first deal; now they count Dunkin' Donuts, CBS and Honda among their clients and have unveiled a new mobile product that's a finalist for MassTLC's mobile innovation of the year. And while he's got his eye firmly on the future, Coburn credits a past mentor for some of his success. "My eighth-grade science teacher told me, 'Life is full of experiences; a full life is taking advantage of them,'" he says. "That stuck with me."

AGNES UGOJI

The Louder Than a Bomb Massachusctts Youth Poetry Slam Festival lived up to its name when Agnes Ugoji took the stage this spring. In intense, incantatory tones, the 16-year-old performed an original poem about Boko Haram, the terrorist group that's devastated her native Nigeria. "They have been destroying so many of my people in my country," Ugoji explains. "I just had to write about it." Crowned the fest's first-ever individual youth poetry slam champion, she went on to represent Massachusetts at the Brave New Voices International Youth Poetry Slam Festival in Washington, D.C., in July—but to Ugoji, it's not about the competition. "I just see it as a community of young writers coming together and showcasing what we've written, sharing all these different ideas." That's also an apt description of her experience with 826 Boston, a nonprofit that helps students ages 6-18 develop their writing skills. It operates the Writers' Room and slam team at Roxbury's John D. O'Bryant School of Mathematics and Science, where Ugoji is a junior who hopes to attend Princeton and pursue a career in public health. "I don't think that I want to make poetry my livelihood, but I would definitely like it to be part of my life," she says, pointing to poets Emi Mahmoud and Crystal Valentine and Nigerian authors Chinua Achebe and Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie as writers who inspire her. "Whatever they write always resonates with me. I want to write about things they write about and topics that they may not have fully touched upon."

SARA VOLZ

Plenty of teenagers make use of the space underneath their mattresses—usually to stash away a week's worth of dirty laundry. But that's where Sara Volz built a laboratory to study algae as a sustainable fuel source. That homegrown project led to her winning the Intel Science Talent Search in 2013 and earned her a shoutout from President Obama at the White House Science Fair. "Even now, three years later, I can still barely believe that happened," she says. Now, the MIT senior is at work on genome engineering technology CRISPR, and this year, in between her usual load of coursework, extracurricular painting and performing with a capella group the Centrifugues, Volz is set on applying to biochemistry and biophysics grad programs. Says the 21-year-old aspiring professor: "Science isn't boring or the tedious memorizing of facts; it's the process of trying to figure out the world around us, asking a testable question and finding more questions."

SAGE HUMPHRIES

Ballerina Sage Humphries makes triple threats look like underachievers. The 18-year-old of many talents recently recorded her original songs with a producer who's worked with the likes of Aerosmith and the Fray; she also acts and models, having walked New York Fashion Week runways and posed for photographer Michel Comte for a shoot for Vogue Italia, during which her dance background came in handy. "In both cases, you must be able to take criticism well and be adaptable," says Humphries, who, after landing multiple school and company scholarships and winning the Youth America Grand Prix regionals last year, just joined Boston Ballet II. Humphries has her sights set on one day becoming a principal dancer. Until then, she has at least one skill she's looking to improve upon: "I truly wish I had better handwriting."

GRACE CONNOR

For Grace Connor, 16 was sweet indeed. The Milton Academy student spent that milestone year founding little g ice cream co., a line of small-batch ice cream packed with homemade baked goods like brownies and cookies. The young entrepreneur—who also plays the viola, the harp and varsity squash—started out running a bakery out of her home as a preteen, making treats for friends and family and even catering weddings. But she wanted a business with more flexibility, since baked goods have a short shelf life—until they're packed in ice cream. So she went for it. "I was confident in the quality and creativity of my creations, and I had confidence that others would love them too." That confidence was well-founded: She now operates her business out of Dorchester's CommonWealth Kitchen, and Formaggio Kitchen Cambridge, Siena Farms and Brookline Grown have all scooped up her product. But Connor has even bigger plans. "I want little g to be a household name, the next Ben & Jerry's," the 17-year-old says. "I want little g ice cream to be on the shelves of grocery stores all across America."

ALEXANDRA SHADROW

Entrepreneurship runs in the blood for Alexandra Shadrow, who spent summers as a child making cold calls at her dad's metal distribution and recycling company. Now the 23-year-old is the founder of UNItiques, a website where college students can buy and sell gently used furniture and clothing. "I love that UNItiques has given me a way to carry on my family's legacy of sustainability," Shadrow says. She founded her company (originally called BUtiques) as a student at BU, after a "super scary Craigslist incident" when a man who responded to her post refused to leave her apartment. So she created a site that required a BU email address to join. "Over 1,000 students joined within the first two months, and students from other colleges were begging me to expand," she says. Four years later, UNItiques has users on more than 400 campuses and a just-launched platform that allows members to buy and sell nationwide; Shadrow now has a team of three employees and more than 40 interns not much younger than herself. "It pushed me to grow up from a teenager to a CEO quickly," she says. But Shadrow still maintains plenty of youthful optimism: "What kind of entrepreneur would I be if I didn't see myself laughing with [Nasty Gal founder] Sophia Amoruso on a yacht in 10 years?"

JOHNNY FAYAD AND ALI KOTHARI

Running late paid off for New Grounds Food founders Johnny Fayad, 22, and Ali Kothari, 21, who dreamed up their CoffeeBar—an energy bar packed with a cup of fair-trade joe—as busy freshman business students at Northeastern. "We started this partly as a joke, just running late to our morning classes and wondering why we couldn't just eat our coffee and get the day going quicker," Fayad explains. They cooked up early prototypes in their dorm's shared kitchen and entered Northeastern's Spring 2013 Husky Startup Challenge; a Kickstarter campaign the next year reached its goal in just 15 hours. Now their CoffeeBars can be found in 400 retail locations across the U.S., including local Shaw's and Star Markets, and they hope to reach 10,000 stores by 2018. The pair's recipe for success? "Northeastern has been a huge resource for us," says Kothari, who notes that they received two grants from the university and plenty of support from pecrs: Student-run design studio Scout helped create the packaging, a campus legal group lent a hand with trademark paperwork, and New Grounds Food is one of 180 ventures enrolled in the student-led accelerator IDEA. In turn, they've sought to support fellow students and entrepreneurs, donating a percentage of proceeds to help fund a new school in Nicaragua, a microloan program for entrepreneurs in Guatemala and the after-school program buildOn—a cause they also supported with a Boston Marathon run, fueling their training, naturally, with CoffeeBars. Not that the two coffee connoisseurs have sworn off their beloved pour-overs. As Fayad says, "We try not to eat through too much of our revenue."

MAX OPGENOORD

Max Opgenoord first heard about Hyperloop the same day that Elon Musk unveiled a white paper on the concept in 2013. The idea is that a pod would travel through a tube, delivering people or goods from point A to point B at speeds of up to 760 mph. When Musk, the SpaceX CEO and Tesla co-founder, announced a competition in 2015 for teams to create a pod for a 1-mile tube track, Opgenoord knew he had to get involved. He joined MIT's Hyperloop team as part of his work toward a master's degree; the team won the pod design competition in January and is slated to take part in a test-track run within the next year. "Planes and trains, while exciting themselves, are limited to the infrastructure—for planes, think of runway lengths and airport availability," Opgenoord says. "With the Hyperloop, nothing is built yet. This means that we can design and optimize the system as a whole—instead of only the pod—using the newest design methodologies and technologies." Now working on his doctorate at MIT, Opgenoord, 23, won't be satisfied with simply chasing the Hyperloop concept: "I want to work on high-profile, high-tech engineering projects, which would also allow me to work on something else every few years."

MURPHY WONSICK

Twenty-four-year-old Murphy Wonsick may be a doctoral student at Northeastern, but she's still focusing on mastering baby steps—for NASA's humanoid robot, that is. As part of one of three internships she's had with the agency, Wonsick is aiding in the development of Valkyrie, a 6-foot-tall robot being designed to help astronauts. "My current research focus is footstep planning. Basically, trying to get Valkyrie to successfully navigate from point A to point B by planning where she can place her feet in order to avoid obstacles and, of course, not fall down," she explains. "I would love to work on a project that would send my work to space, so, in a way, a part of me would be there." But her engineering skills have plenty of down-to-earth applications too: Murphy has also been working on an app to improve the tracking of blood samples that could help combat epidemics in developing countries.

AGENDA for 8/10–8/23

Fan Fair

Have a super time at Boston Comic Con.

FANS WHO'VE ALREADY seen Suicide Squad can get another superhero (or antihero) fix when Boston Comic Con hits town. And this year, it's set to be more super than ever. Aside from the usual cosplay, costume contests and panels with genre experts, the 2016 Con's agenda is stacked with a "Drink and Draw" night where aspiring artists can throw back beers and create live art alongside pros, an indie film fest and more. Plus, this year marks Star Trek's 50th anniversary, which means Trekkies get extra love with events like a night at Fenway Park, where William Shatner will throw out the first pitch. And with appearances from The X-Files' Gillian Anderson and Gotham's Ben McKenzie (better known as The OC's Ryan to the non-Con set), fanboys and fangirls of all stripes should fly to the Seaport World Trade Center on Aug. 12-14. / Alexandra Cavallo

The 2016 Boston Comic Con runs Aug. 12-14 at the Seaport World Trade Center, 1 Seaport Lane, Boston. $30-$50, $90-$165, three-day pass. bostoncomiccon.com

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

OBVIOUSLY FUNNY Jenny Slate made recent headlines with her relationship with fellow Bay State native Chris Evans, but the actress and comedian is buzzworthy for far more than her chiseled action-star beau. The dryly funny Milton native first made waves in 2009, when she dropped an F-bomb on SNL; she went on to score her first big-screen starring role in 2014 indie hit Obvious Child and voice the title character in Internet-beloved stop-motion short-film series Marcel the Shell with Shoes On. Now she's working her vocal cords as Gidget the dog in the summer animated hit The Secret Life of Pets. But you can catch her live at the Sinclair, where Slate will flex her comedy chops with a stand-up set on Aug. 14. / Alexandra Cavallo

FIGHT CLUB Long before his stateside box office success, action star Jackie Chan was churning out blockbuster hits in Hong Kong—and doing all of his own stunts. In Supercop, the third installment in the Police Story franchise, he plays an undercover Hong Kong detective sent to mainland China to stop the leader of an international drug ring, a role that helped make a name for him in '90s Hollywood (and left him with a dislocated cheekbone). Cop a seat when the film screens as part of a Reel Weird series honoring Chan on Aug. 20-21 at the Brattle Theatre. / Jennifer Usovicz

Café Society ★★1/2 Woody Allen narrates his 47th feature as a writer and director, and for the first time, he sounds as if every one of his 80 years has caught up with him. It's a bit of a shock to hear him sound so labored and drawn, even if we've grown to accept that Allen's late-period writing and directing will more often than not remain fatigued. But while his writing here offers few new insights, his visuals aren't nearly as lethargic; he's working for the first time with legendary cinematographer Vittorio Storaro, and Café Society is certainly beautiful. Allen's 1930s-set morality tale begins in a sun-kissed Hollywood as influential talent agent Phil Stern (Steve Carell) reluctantly hires Bobby (Jesse Eisenberg), his smart but neurotic young nebbish of a nephew. That's right: Eisenberg plays Bobby as another in a long line of Allen surrogates who have fallen into the trap of emulating their director's mannerisms and vocal inflections—at least during the first half, when Phil passes Bobby off to his personal assistant, Vonnie (an incandescent Kristen Stewart), a Nebraska transplant Bobby falls hopelessly head over heels for. But this is a melancholy film in which dreams are dashed and families shattered; Bobby won't remain the person he was at the beginning. Like Allen though, he'll keep on working, even if his best days are behind him. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Finding Dory ★★★ Thirteen years have transpired since Disney Pixar's Finding Nemo swam into viewers' hearts on its way to winning an Oscar; fortunately, this sequel feels more like a continuation than a window-dressed remake. Returning director Andrew Stanton regains his sea legs, confidently diving back into the animated oceans after trying his hand at live action with Disney's 2012 mega-flop, John Carter. A victim of bad marketing, that under-appreciated fantasy is better than you've heard; you could do worse than seeking it out on video after heading to the theater for the fulfilling further adventures of overprotective clownfish Marlin (voiced once again by Albert Brooks) and his differently abled son Nemo (Hayden Rolence, replacing the now-adult Alexander Gould), who have settled back into life in their coral reef after returning from Australia. Stanton, along with co-writer/co-director Angus MacLane, continues to shine a positive light on those who are different, shifting the focus to Dory (the returning Ellen DeGeneres), the blue tang who suffers from short-term memory loss. When she suddenly recalls her parents, the three set off to find them as Dory also begins a journey to find herself, aided immeasurably by a deeper performance by DeGeneres. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Ghostbusters ★1/2 Here's a movie that's been taking knocks since it was announced, as misogynistic man-children, armed with fond memories of Ivan Reitman's comedy classic, 1984's Ghostbusters, took to the Internet to decry the notion of a female-led reboot. And even when the first trailer for Paul Feig's film failed to elicit many laughs from general moviegoers, this critic stood firm in his belief that while Feig's brand of comedy rarely translates in two-minute trailers, it shines in two-hour films such as 2011's Bridesmaids and last summer's Spy, both of which featured Feig's comedic ace-in-the-hole:

Melissa McCarthy. She's back, alongside Bridesmaids' Kristen Wiig and Saturday Night Live's Kate McKinnon and Leslie Jones, who band together to battle the supernatural. All four actresses are comic spitfires...in other projects. Sad to say, this film never rises above its opening, when a tour guide (Silicon Valley's Zach Woods) informs visitors at a supposedly haunted estate of the New York manor's once-innovative "face bidet" and "anti-Irish fence." Those are funny lines, but the comedy soon stops nearly as dead as the ectoplasm-spewing apparitions that appear. Thor's Chris Hemsworth steals a few laughs as the ghostbusting gals' himbo assistant, but not even the God of Thunder can lend enough sparks to bring this lame film to laugh-filled life. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jason Bourne ★★ Matt Damon returns to the series that made him a star (the less said about 2012's Damon-less The Bourne Legacy, the better), and while this is the fourth time the Boston-bred actor has played man of few words Jason Bourne, it's the first time one of his films has felt so perfunctory. Paul Greengrass, director of the second and third installments, 2004's The Bourne Supremacy and 2007's The Bourne Ultimatum, also returns, but the script he's concocted with co-writer Christopher Rouse (his longtime editor) does little but put the former CIA operative through very familiar paces. Sure, there are a couple of large-scale action sequences that should probably thrill longtime fans of the series spawned from the pages of late author Robert Ludlum's books, but our lethal hero isn't nearly as smart this time out, leaving himself exposed near open windows while handling even less smart devices like a thumb drive with the word "ENCRYPTED" printed in big block letters on its side. This is Jason Bourne for Dummies. Sadly, in the era of Trump, this may be enough. Julia Stiles also returns for the fourth time as Nicky Parsons, setting the convoluted plot in motion as we learn exactly one new detail about Bourne, who lacks his usually reliable identity. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Our Little Sister ★★★★ Japan's Hirokazu Koreeda continues to carry the mantle laid down by his countryman, the late, great filmmaker Yasujiro Ozu. But the 54-year-old former documentarian isn't interested in adhering to Ozu's unique formalism, which expertly documented fallible humanity and the passage of time, with nary a camera move to be seen. Nevertheless, Koreeda's portraits are just as humane, by turns heartwarming and heartbreaking. His incredibly moving latest, Our Little Sister (or "Umimachi Diary" in Japan), which deservedly won four of the 13 Japanese Academy Awards for which it was nominated, is loosely derived from Akimi Yoshida's long-running manga of the same name. Koreeda's adaptation follows the teenaged Suzu Asano (Newcomer of the Year winner Suzu Hirose), who moves in with her three adult half-sisters (Haruka Ayase, Masami Nagasawa and Kaho) in their large old house in the seaside town of Kamakura. Koreeda opens his film with the funeral of the four sisters' philandering father, a plot point derived from the source material. He's narrowed the focus, however, keeping his lens trained on Suzu and her eldest sister, Sachi (Ayase), the only one of the three Kôda family siblings old enough to clearly recall their father. Thus, she's the only one who shares Suzu's complex feelings for the irresponsible yet caring man. Simply lovely. (At Kendall Square.)

STAR POWER Star Trek Beyond is the latest installment in the science-fiction franchise, which is celebrating its 50th anniversary.

of the monosyllabic Minions, stars of a short that precedes the main feature) has become a box-office smash, but creatively, it's splashing around in the shallow end of the pool. Just compare the depth of Albert Brooks' Marlin character in Disney Pixar's latest, Finding Dory, to the sharp-taloned falcon, Tiberius, he plays here. The former displays a full range of human emotions and feelings (even though he's a fish), while the predator he plays here is mostly a cheap gimmick used to mine laughs with the threat of pointless violence and cruelty toward animals that this film from the team of director Chris Renaud and writers Cinco Paul and Ken Daurio (who gave us Despicable Me and its sequel) occasionally pushes too far. The pandering, lazy screenplay recycles the basic structure (but not the emotional center) of Pixar's Toy Story, replacing toys with pets, though we get to see precious little of the animals' secret life, as promised by the title and appealing trailers, which featured the best jokes. Something's very wrong when you hire Louis C.K., one of the smartest comics out there, to voice Max, a dumb dog in a film filled with stupid, crowd-pleasing animals. Woof. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Star Trek Beyond ★★★ Despite fans' early fears that he might be making the Muppet Babies equivalent of Star Trek, producer/director J.J. Abrams resurrected the crew of the U.S.S. Enterprise rather brilliantly in his 2009 reboot of Paramount Pictures' stagnant film franchise, and his genius lay in the casting. Chris Pine, Zachary Quinto, Karl Urban, Zoe Saldana, Simon Pegg, John Cho and Anton Yelchin all perfectly embodied the iconic roles of Kirk, Spock, Bones, Uhura, Scotty, Sulu and Chekov, and the addition of Leonard Nimoy, playing Spock from the old timeline, seemed to thrill old and new fans alike. Sure, the story was fairly boilerplate, but Abrams had successfully relaunched the series, leaving it open to "boldly go" in new directions. Four years later, however, Abrams decided to stealthily remake 1982's The Wrath of Khan, instead—and no one was happy. Now, for Trek's 50th anniversary, Pegg has pulled double duty, co-writing a movie with Doug Jung that feels, for the first time, like an episode of the original TV series. The genius of this film is that new director Justin Lin (from the Fast and the Furious franchise) doesn't just place the crew in well-choreographed action; he and Pegg understand that it's the characters themselves that we're here to see, and we're treated to some of the best interactions since 1986's The Voyage Home. It feels like we've returned home, indeed. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Suicide Squad ★1/2 I hope you liked that extraneous scene that stopped Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice cold, the one where Wonder Woman pauses in front of her computer to watch fan-service video clips that introduced the Flash, Cyborg and Aquaman, because the first reel of writer/director David Ayer's Suicide Squad—which promised to be DC Comics' big-screen equivalent to The Dirty Dozen—is dedicated to introducing us to "the worst of the worst." Amanda Waller (Viola Davis), the ethics-free, bureaucratic head of a secret government agency, flips through a dossier over dinner; one by one, we see photos of the antiheroes she'll eventually bring together as flashes of their backstories are shown, accompanied by a "hip" collection of licensed songs that's been carefully curated to sell soundtrack tie-ins. Sadly, Waller turns out to be much more intimidating than the supervillains she assembles, from "world's deadliest assassin" Deadshot (played with not-so-deadly snark by Will Smith) to Harley Quinn (Margot Robbie, covered in sex appeal and little else), one-time shrink and current girlfriend of the Joker. Speaking of, if you're coming to this film based on the promise of seeing Jared Leto's tatted, grill-toothed take on the Clown Prince of Crime, you're in for a letdown. Barely appearing, he's about as frightening as DC's latest unfocused misfire is entertaining. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Swiss Army Man ★★★ When we first see the heavily bearded, disheveled Hank (Paul Dano), he's apparently stranded on an island, moments from hanging himself by a noose. Tightening the makeshift rope around his neck, he glimpses something we gather he hasn't seen in quite some time: another human, who's washed up on shore not 20 yards away, the surf nipping at his heels. Then Hank loses his footing, and we hear a snap. Ah, but this is just the beginning of the strangest comedy you're likely to see this year, the debut film from "the Daniels," aka Dan Kwan and Daniel Scheinert, a writer/director duo in their 20s who met when they were students at Emerson College. Turns out, that body is a corpse, but the real surprise isn't that the waterlogged, sallow figure with a perpetually open mouth and an unblinking eye is played by Daniel Radcliffe. Instead, it's that his stomach begins to rumble, which quickly escalates into outright flatulence. Soon, Hank is rocketing across the ocean, using "Manny" as a Jet Ski propelled by, well, gas. All this before the opening credits—and it gets stranger from here. Could this be an Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge? Ultimately, it's up to adventurous viewers to decide. (At Somerville and in the suburbs.)

IT'S GETTIN' HOT IN HERE No offense to Harry Styles and his One Direction mates, but we like our boy bands like we like our fine wine: aged. We're talking vintage boy band beefcake material: tanned, overly muscled, prone to wearing matching outfits and cheesy as all hell. Like 98 Degrees, the quartet fronted by certified 90z dreamboat Nick Lachey (best remembered for his portrayal of Jessica Simpson's endlessly patient husband on a reality TV show) and famous for their 1998 hit single "I Do (Cherish You)." Following the lead of bands like NKOTB, 98 Degrees recently reunited, announcing a nationwide MY2K tour with fellow '90s/early-aughts crooners O-Town, Ryan Cabrera (best remembered for his portrayal of Ashlee Simpson's endlessly patient boyfriend on a reality TV show) and Dream. Is it hot in here or is it just us? Relive the glory days on Aug. 14 when the tour hits the House of Blues. / Alexandra Cavallo PHOTO: FACULTY MANAGEMENT PRODUCTIONS

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

FLASH BACKS Wendy Chidester got a literal change of scenery one rainy day, when the landscape painter found herself purchasing a vintage camera on a whim. Since then, the Utah-based artist has been bringing new life to antiques, depicting everything from an 1895 telephone to an Underwood typewriter and a German child's sewing machine. Pairing bygone subjects with punchy backgrounds, Chidester's oil paintings—like Lenses, seen above—lovingly render details, shadows and textures for a different take on preservation. Get a blast from the past at Arden Gallery, where her new exhibit Revival is on display through Aug. 28. / Jacqueline Weiss

BOOKS & POETRY

Edited by Meghan Kavanaugh

LOVE AND WAR

Childhood nights spent spying on parents have rarely been put to better use. In her debut novel, The Beautiful Possible, Amy Gottlieb draws upon years of listening to her mother and friends chat over coffee as inspiration for the character of Rosalie, the wife of an American rabbi who develops feelings for a German World War II refugee, sparking a decades-long postwar love triangle. Bolstered by Gottlieb's own experience editing rabbis' sermons, The Beautiful Possible is a study of faith, love, chance and the poetry of it all. Listen up when Gottlieb heads to Newtonville Books on Aug. 17. / Rachael Allen

WISHFUL THINKING

It was an Asian food aficionado's wet dream when the Asian American Civic Association hosted its annual gala at Royale, with wall-to-wall food stations serving everything from Indian to Thai to Korean to Chinese to Japanese to I'm-not-entirely-sure-what.

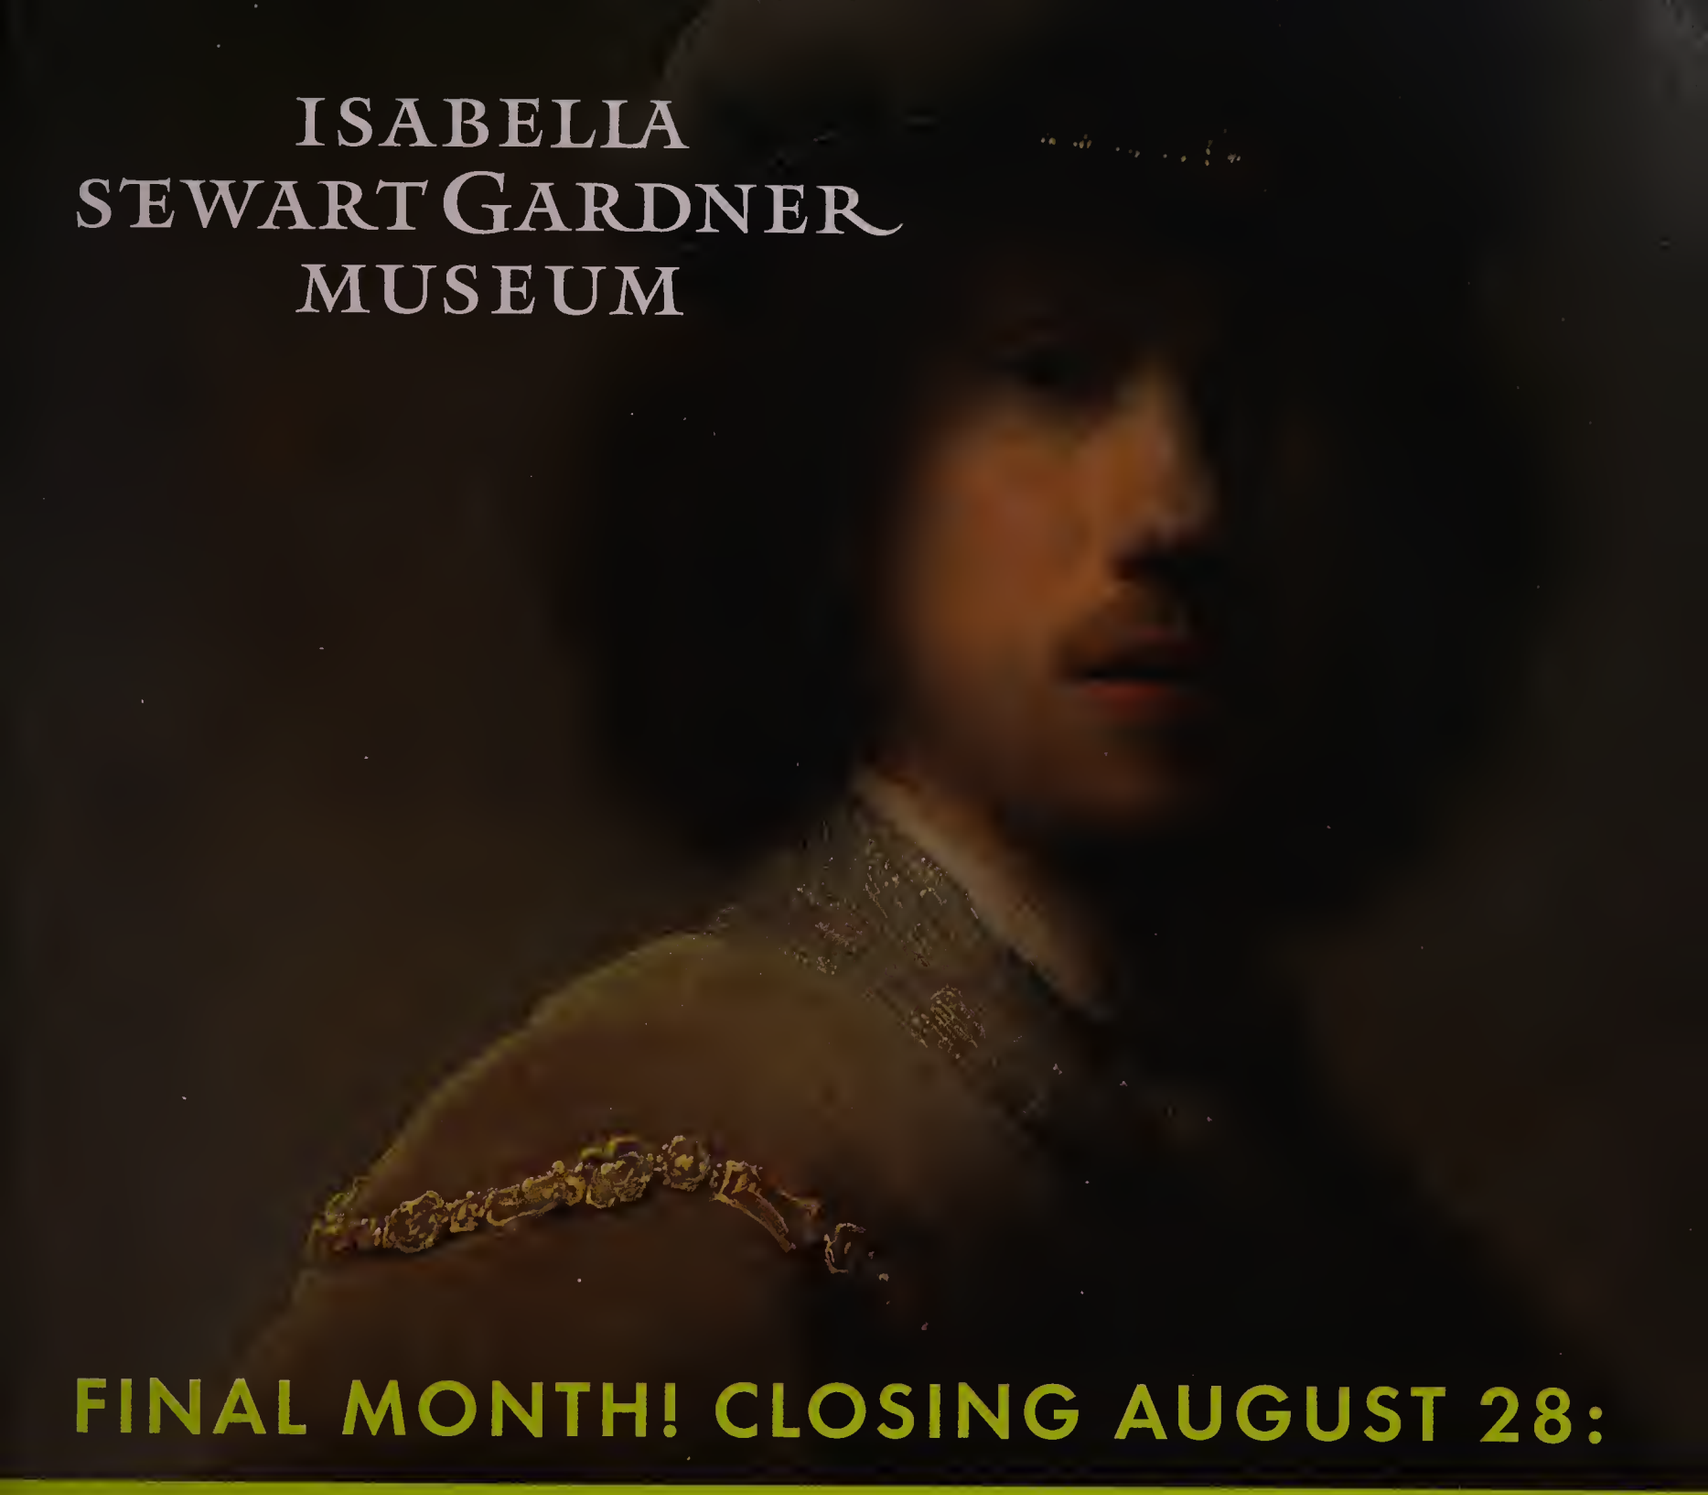
"I'm going to leave here obese," lamented one guest, mingling in a crowd that included Mayor Marty Walsh, restaurant equipment czar Felix Lui, grand old man Marvin Gilmore, Chinatown booster Stanley Chen, arts patron Victoria Marsh, Labor Secretary Ron Walker, Boys and Girls Club big cheese Josh Kraft, healthcare honcho Don Cornuet, bridge builder Sherry Dong, retail titan Robert Lundy, emcee and Channel 5 beauty Antoinette Antonio, awardees Yanmei Chen and Sudha Bhandari, banking bigwig Rich Holbrook, Thai wonder Ajaree Walsh (carving works of art out of watermelons) and a guy somewhat distractingly dressed as a banana.

In addition to the food, there was entertainment in the form of Bollywood, Japanese and Han tribal folk dances, and the amount of networking accomplished reinforced certain stereotypes—to wit, Gov. Charlie Baker sticking around to glad-hand the crowd long after leaving the stage.

Speaking of which, this was the evening's best exchange: "It sounds like the governor has laryngitis."

"I wish all politicians did."

THE JOYS OF PARENTHOOD



If there's a more beloved man in Boston than Red Sox slugger David Ortiz, we don't know him, and the turnout at the Park Plaza for the David Ortiz Children's Fund Gala was proof positive.

A benefit for Big Papi's charity to provide heart surgery for kids in the Dominican Republic and New England, the evening drew a fantastically eclectic crowd that included his stunning wife, Tiffany, and children Alex, Jessica and D'Angelo, Tiffany's sister and niece, Kerri and Bailey Miller (visiting from Wisconsin), team owners John and Linda Henry, teammates Clay Buchholz, Dustin Pedroia and Koji Uehara, Patriot Dion Lewis, lovable funnyman Lenny Clarke, radio blabbermouth Matt Siegel, baseball scribbler Peter Abraham, design cutie Jimmy Guzman, toothsome TV pair Jenny Johnson and Billy Costa, celebrity chef Ming Tsai, rainmaker Peter Riddle, pediatric cardiologist Oscar Benavidez, restaurateur extraordinaire Nick Varano, stunning blond jewelry designer April Soderstrom and her main squeeze, Ben Rawitz, and Patriots owner Bob Kraft, who ponied up a cool $100K for the cause.

A silent auction, along with a giant inflatable heart, dominated the cocktail hour, after which the doors to the ballroom opened for a dinner, speeches and merry-making. The evening's choicest remark: "I have a 7-year-old, which means that I won't get a decent night's sleep for at least the next 11 years." ◆

LOOKIN' GOOD

I'M PRETTY SURE I HAVEN'T WORN velvet since 1996, when my sartorially challenged seventh-grade self donned a hot-pink, scoop-necked, crushed-velvet top for an excruciatingly awkward school dance. But I'm tempted to make up for lost time in light of our lead fashion spread for this issue, which has Lydia Santangelo bringing richly colored fashions in velvet and other luxe materials to a perfectly coordinated setting: Newport's Gilded hotel, where Boston interior designer Rachel Reider swathed everything from the pillows to the pool table in jewel tones and plush textiles. Elsewhere, Sarah Hagman rounds up white button-up tops that are anything but basic. Intrepid humor columnist Ezra Dyer undergoes a makeover of sorts, embarking on his virgin voyage into the spray tan booth. And we check in with two talents with style to spare: buzzy Berklee grad Xenia Rubinos, the songstress featured in Paul Robicheau's music column, and our cover subject, stand-up star and Emerson alum Iliza Shlesinger, who chats with Jonathan Soroff about her new Netflix special and her take-no-prisoners approach to comedy. Happy reading.

RADIO CRED

PRX DEBUTS BOSTON'S FIRST COMMUNITY PODCAST STUDIO.

Casting a Wider Net

Since This American Life spinoff Serial became an instant sensation in 2014, podcasts have increasingly filtered into water cooler chit-chat and fueled Internet forum conversations for dedicated communities of listeners. But the art of creating a podcast can be a very solitary affair. Boston's Public Radio Exchange (PRX) hopes to change that with the PRX Podcast Garage, the city's first community audio and media arts training facility, which opened on Western Avenue in lower Allston in early August.

"What we're really trying to do is create an intentional community," says PRX director of special projects Audrey Mardavich, explaining that many podcasters get started working in bedrooms, with little opportunity to receive feedback on their work. "We hope that this will be a place for people from all over the city, or all over New England, to come and learn some new skills, use the recording studios and meet each other."

The Garage hosts a large studio, equipped with microphones to accommodate up to four people and connected to an outside control room, and a one-person vocal booth hooked up with a single mic, though Garage members are welcome to bring in their own equipment. Members will also have access to a digital mixer, which they can control from an iPad, and a computer tricked out with all the audio-editing software a podcaster could need: ProTools, Hindenburg, Audacity, Audition and, soon, Reaper. The studio is also set up so that podcasters can Skype in collaborators.

"We really tried to get good stuff that would be out of reach for most producers," Mardavich says. "The idea of the Garage is that we don't have a full-time engineer on staff, which makes the rates pretty affordable. But we're going to be here to help you, we're going to have manuals, so it's very easy to use all of this."

POD PEOPLE: The Garage is a gathering place for established and novice podcasters.

Membership rates will cost about $99 a month and include three hours of studio time. However, Mardavich says the Garage will be open to anyone in the community with interest or questions. To that end, they plan to keep their doors open during the week for walk-in inquiries and have slated a host of upcoming free events designed to encourage community involvement. Those events include a recurring "Podcasting 101" series, which will have established local producers giving talks based upon their specialized skill sets, and a salon series curated by PRX's Radiotopia executive producer Julie Shapiro that will bring in talent from around the country. On Sept. 12, Radiotopia will also host a Topefest in the Garage's parking lot, where members of the community can mingle with leading audio producers from around the world.

Mardavich hopes to be able to draw people not only to the Garage—which is part of Zone 3, a Harvard-sparked initiative to bolster retail and programming along Western Avenue—but to the dynamic but often overlooked neighborhood.

"I didn't even know this, but Yo-Yo Ma's Silk Road Ensemble headquarters is right around the corner, the Harvard i-lab is right down the street," she says. "It's insane. You could live here and go to a different thing every night. And a lot of people don't know that. And that's [another] goal of mine—I really want to sort of help make all this stuff going on here more visible to the greater community." / Alexandra Cavallo

LISTEN UP
AUDREY'S PODCAST PICKS

WBUR's Kind World "Erika Lantz crafts beautiful local stories about the profound effect one act can have on our lives. They will sometimes make you cry or make you want to hug your neighbor."

Radiotopia's Millennial "Millennial is a podcast about how to maneuver your 20s, but I think it's a show people of any age could relate to. Host Megan Tan just joined our podcast network (Radiotopia), and she lives in Portland, Maine, so she'll be spending a lot of time at the Garage!"

NPR's Code Switch "Excellent, honest conversations about race, identity and culture from the butterfly effects of Ferguson to talking about how LGBTQ people of color dealt with the aftermath of the Orlando shooting. Challenging, enlightening, a must-listen."

WNYC's 2 Dope Queens "If you love funny women — of course you do — then you will love 2 Dope Queens by Jessica Williams and Phoebe Robinson, which features recordings of their insanely funny live comedy show in Brooklyn."

Radiotopia's The Heart "It's so hard to single out Radiotopia podcasts because I love them all, but The Heart recently put out a groundbreaking miniseries called Silent Evidence that focused on one woman's story of childhood sexual abuse. A tough but absolutely incredible listen."

PRX and Transom's HowSound "Host Rob Rosenthal is an amazing radio teacher, and he plays stories that are both wonderful to listen to and have a lesson to teach about making great radio."

DOT SPOT. Lucy's American Tavern serves many comfort food faves, including its signature burger.

LOVE FOR LUCY

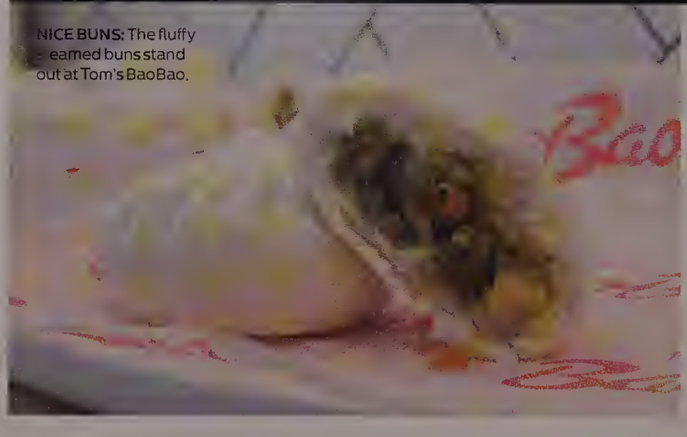
A SLEEK NEIGHBORHOOD TAVERN FINDS A HOME IN DORCHESTER.

Lucy's American Tavern
13 Granite Ave., Boston
(617-326-6677)
lucysamericantavern.com

WHAT HAPPENED TO YOUR neighborhood video rental store? Well, if you live in Dorchester's Adams Village, the answer starting in mid-August is that it grew up into a handsome neighborhood tavern.

With its facade with four garage doors opening to a 60-seat patio out front, Lucy's American Tavern aims for a welcoming vibe in the space that sat empty for about a half-decade after it housed a Blockbuster and then Hollywood Video. A 33-seat wooden bar, walls of whitewashed brick and cast-iron fixtures dominate the interior, which seats 147.

"The goal is to maximize the space and give it a nice, airy feeling," says co-owner Shawn Ahern, who tapped Chris Bussell (Butterfish, BoMa, Legal Crossing) to helm the scratch kitchen.



The menu includes lots of comfort food staples, from burgers and nachos to chicken and waffles. A section of snacks features steamed pork buns with kimchee as well as house-smoked wings with three different sauces. Seasonal salads include a watermelon and arugula dish featuring local feta and an orange vinaigrette. Larger-format plates range from pan-roasted salmon with smoked-tomato risotto to a chef's barbecue board that features two meats (smoked beef brisket and pork rib on the opening menu), Texas beans and corn on the cob.

"We want people to come in and say, 'OK, I know this,'" Ahern says. "Then hopefully they taste it, and the flavor profile is different than what they've had. But they still recognize what they're having."

Lucy's will offer 27 beers on tap, including suds from local brewers such as Mystic, Bent Water and Idle Hands. There will also be four on-tap wine picks and two housemade sangrias on tap. Local distillers such as Bully Boy, GrandTen and Privateer will have their spirits on display in a cocktail list of approachable drinks. Ahern highlights the root beer Old Fashioned (Bulleit bourbon, housemade root beer syrup and cherry bitters) and a pisco punch (pisco, housemade pineapple syrup, fresh lemon and malbec) as two early favorites.

And for those who don't recognize the root of the tavern's name, Ahern is ready with a history lesson on Lucy Stone, a suffragist and abolitionist who was born in 1818, lived most of her life in Dorchester and became the first woman in the state to earn a college degree.

"She's the real deal. She's kind of a trailblazer for women's rights. As soon as we started reading about her, we just said, 'Yes,'" Ahern says. "We wanted to connect with the generations that have been in this neighborhood before."

NICE BUNS: The fluffy steamed buns stand out at Tom's BaoBao.

Good Eats: Take a Bao

Boston is a sister city to China's Hangzhou, the birthplace and headquarters of handmade steamed bun giant Tom's BaoBao, so when owner Tom Tong decided to open his first U.S. location in July, he set up shop just over the bridge in Harvard Square. The recipes made the move as well, so there are treats like the curry beef bao stuffed with diced beef, carrots and potatoes and a mild curry. But with a dough made with part-whole wheat flour steaming to thick and fluffy perfection in authentic Chinese bamboo baskets, it's the signature bun that steals the show. / Meghan Kavanaugh

PARTY STARTER: designingDARYL, bottom right, has created ornate pieces for collectors and Carnival dancers.

KING OF BLING

For the past two decades, Boston resident Daryl Cox, better known by the moniker designingDARYL, has used thousands of rhinestones and pounds of feathers to craft colorful bodysuits, headdresses and boots seen in parades and performances around the world. The Trinidad and Tobago native is also involved in planning Boston Carnival, so in advance of the festivities dancing into town on Aug. 27, he helped us get the party started. / Meghon Kovanaugh

WHAT GOT YOU INTERESTED IN CARNIVAL? In our culture, Carnival is a big deal. It happens every year just before the Ash Wednesday celebration in the Roman Catholic faith, so on that Monday and Tuesday, the entire country basically shuts down and the folks there revel in Carnival, which is sort of a celebration where they throw caution into the wind. It's a giant street parade. To be in the Carnival, that means it runs in your blood.

HOW LONG DOES IT TAKE YOU TO MAKE A SINGLE COSTUME? I can actually construct a full costume if you give me about a week. When Wyclef Jean contacted a band that I worked with about two months ago...he needed a headpiece done, and I did it in 48 hours.

WHAT ARE SOME OF YOUR CAREER HIGHLIGHTS? My major highlight comes with the [costume] launches. And that's because it's really a pageant show. It's really like the Victoria's Secret Fashion Show on steroids. It's a lot of energy; it's a lot of music. Those are the moments that I live for, and I'm happy that I can't really count a highlight because annually it happens for me. It's kind of like I get to relive my dream every year.

WHAT MAKES BOSTON CARNIVAL SPECIAL? Boston is such a diverse cultural melting pot, and it's certainly taken some time to get here. [It's] an experience to totally dabble in a culture that's not your own where people throw judgments aside and all come out to have fun. It's all about fun and laughter. We have to basically appreciate what we have, and this is certainly a cultural explosion. It's color; it's feathers. There's laughter; it's beautiful people. It's certainly an experience I think someone should have, and it's right in your city.

Drink of the Moment
THE MARKSMAN

PRICE: $11

INGREDIENTS: GrandTen South Boston Irish Whiskey, Lapsang Souchong-infused honey, fresh lemon juice

TASTE: "Even though there are really only three ingredients, there's a lot of flavor," explains bar manager Steve Schnelwar, who pairs the whiskey—lighter and ripe for summertime sippin'—with the tea's leather, cigar and tobacco notes. "I always refer to it as being very much like 'Dad's old armchair,' " says the 80 Thoreau alum, adding that it's a great choice for scotch and mezcal drinkers.

GRANDTEN BAR
383 Dorchester Ave., Boston (617-269-0497)
grandten.com/bar

ALL THE FIXIN'S: Schnelwar has been busy making homemade syrups, shrubs and tinctures since the opening of GrandTen Distilling's new cocktail bar last month, working with what he dubs "golden handcuffs," as the license requires all alcohol be made onsite. "I have the opportunity to go make exactly the flavor profile, the consistency, the sweetness level that I want. There's a lot of freedom," Schnelwar says. In the coming months, keep an eye out for new infusions, like a Campari-esque concoction using GrandTen's Craneberry liqueur, and even new spirits, including a more rye-heavy whiskey.

NOT A WHISKEY FAN? The menu has a lineup of highballs for those looking for something a little easier to sip. Go for the Cape Codder ($8), a mix of spicy ginger beer and GrandTen's Fire Puncher vodka, distilled with chipotle pepper.

ATMOSPHERE: "I look at it like we're the kids with the coolest basement on the block," Schnelwar says. There's shuffleboard, foosball and game boards aplenty, with spaghetti Westerns and kung fu flicks playing above the concrete-top bar, which owners Matthew Nuernberger and Spencer McMinn hand-poured. They also built some of the tables and shelves in the space, which opens at 4 pm on Thursdays and Fridays and 1 pm on the weekends. / Soroh Hogman

SWEET SCIENCE

We spoon honey into our tea and spread it on our toast—but what did the bees who made it have for breakfast? Busy worker bees can visit up to 100 flowers during a single foraging expedition, and we wingless types can follow their flight paths with HoneyDNA, a brand-new offering from Boston-based beekeeping biz The Best Bees Company. "We explained it as the world's first edible genome," says founder and chief scientific officer Noah Wilson-Rich, who first demonstrated HoneyDNA at the MIT Media Lab this spring. Now anyone can send his South End lab a honey sample; the team analyzes the DNA of the pollen traces within, and customers receive an infographic breakdown of the plant species the bees feasted on, accompanied by hand-painted illustrations by resident artist Paige Mulhern. "These results help inform the general public about what we can do to help provide food for these vitally important creatures," Wilson-Rich explains. Plus, proceeds from the $150 service support Best Bees' nonprofit arm, the Urban Beekeeping Laboratory and Bee Sanctuary, which conducts research on bee health and brings hives to sites like schools, community gardens and vacant lots. Get a taste of the action at Cambridge restaurant EVOO, where Wilson-Rich will host a Liquid Gold launch event for HoneyDNA—complete with hors d'oeuvres and cocktails inspired by the bee biomes—on Sept. 27 as part of HUBweek. / Jacqueline Houton

BONUS BUZZ!

Just in time for National Honey Month, Salem chocolate maker Harbor Sweets is releasing its new Gather chocolates, a set of six confections featuring local wildflower honey and a snazzy honeycomb box designed by South Ender Jim Hood. The sweetest part: A portion of proceeds benefits the Pollinator Partnership, a nonprofit dedicated to preserving the health and habitats of tiny creatures that have an outsized impact on our ecosystems and food supply. Find a box starting in September at Blackstone's of Beacon Hill and Back Bay and harborsweets.com.

Out of 25 YEARS— THE VAULT

The Improper is celebrating its 25th anniversary in 2016, and to mark the occasion, we're digging through the archives for gems from issues past. Behold, some highlights from our past fashion coverage.

Last issue, we happily announced the '90s were back. And they are! But we—respectfully—hope that cover girl Cuong Lu's "show us your Calvins" look from this 1996 fall style issue stays firmly in the past.

Fashion truly went to the dogs for this shoot for a fall 2001 issue in which mutts decked out in designs from the likes of Burberry and Coach easily upstaged their human co-models.

Proof that not all our past fashion finds were faux pas: In 2009 we tapped Christopher Chaun Bennett as one of the city's most stylish people. These days? He crafts couture bowties for the likes of Queen Bey!

HOLLY RIKE

Immaculate Heart* by Camille DeAngelis
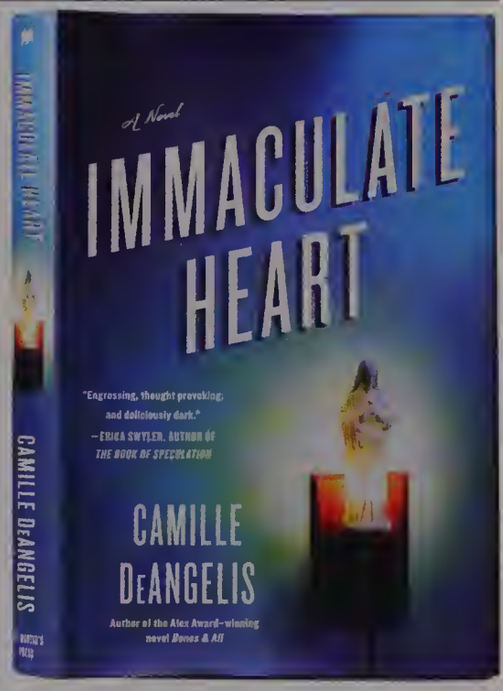
Published by St. Martin's Press, 304 pages, $26



RECEIVING A VISION OF THE VIRGIN Mary might seem to be a miraculous, beautiful event. But in the lives of the four Irish teens in this novel, the experience lurches in traumatic directions.

Our narrator is a New York journalist who had met the three girls in the group a few years before the apparition during a boyhood visit to Ballymorris. Now, 25 years later, he's returned to the town, ostensibly for a funeral, but really to explore the effects of the vision with an objective journalistic eye—and to remember his connections with and affections toward the girls.

News of the visitation initially brought sick tourists seeking cures through magic waters. But that fervor faded after the Church declined to recognize the apparition, which seems like it may have been more of a curse than a blessing to those who saw it. Declan, the lone boy in the foursome, left the country. Orla, now married with three kids, wants to deny it ever happened. Tess, whom the journalist had kissed as a 12-year-old, has become a nun—sensible, intelligent, but soaked with old guilts. The most tortured girl, Síle, was deemed crazy and institutionalized. But the journalist appreciates her genuine being and falls a bit in love with her as he tries to uncover the truth of what happened that day.

Somerville scribe DeAngelis' colorful rendering of the local bar-dwelling Irishmen—and the rollicking cynicism that is their religion—reads like it dripped from an Irish pen. In an inquiring spirit, DeAngelis lets many possibilities float as she explores the effects of the visitation on the girls, which range from diamond-bright to disturbingly dark.

FROM PAGE 226: What if you ran into the Blessed Virgin Mary somewhere—like trying on a blue silk scarf at a department store, or giving her seat to a white-haired man with a cane on a crowded subway car—and she was dressed like an ordinary woman, and you never knew it was her? ◆

FULL OF BULL: Visitors to the Azores can watch a running of the bulls, enjoy scenic views and relax at a rooftop pool at Azor Hotel.

The Escape Artist / Carley D. Thornell

BY THE HORNS

SEIZE A SENSE OF ADVENTURE ON A TRIP TO THE SUNNY AZORES.

READY FOR AN ADVENTURE? GRAB A BEER and get set to make new friends in the teeming crowd when the ground thunders during the running of the bulls in Terceira. The tradition dates back to when the Spanish tried to invade this mid-Atlantic Portuguese island and residents set the livestock free to attack, but it's all in good fun here since the beasts live to see another day—and many more sprints through other villages on this gem that's a four-hour flight from Boston.

Visitors to Terceira and São Miguel, the two most populous of the nine islands known as the Azores, are embracing daredevil activities that spotlight the archipelago's stunning ocean-side landscapes and dramatic volcanic rock formations. Case in point: The latter isle just welcomed a bull of another kind, the Red Bull Cliff Diving World Series, for 90-foot plunges into the vibrant blue waters of Vila Franca do Campo. (Those looking to just chill at the islet's secluded beach can try to grab one of about 400 allotted spots via daily seasonal ferry.)

Cliff plunges aren't for amateurs, but travelers who like watersports, mountains and hiking should check out canyoning, a trendy athletic endeavor in which adventurers equipped with a wetsuit and a sense of humor climb and slide through streams and coast and rappel down or jump from waterfalls. The thrill of adrenaline is countered by a relaxing drive and pleasant conversation with the crew from tour operator Picos de Aventura as they navigate past São Miguel's jaw-dropping cliffs and rolling emerald hills bursting with hydrangeas that mark the boundaries of farmers' fields.

After a day of activity you'll sleep well, especially when staying at one of capital Ponta Delgada's newest accommodations, Azor Hotel. The 5-star property boasts rooms with clean, modern lines and harbor views, a panoramic rooftop swimming pool and a lobby cafe and wine bar with tasty homemade ice creams (the anise and coconut combo is divine, and the local beer Especial is just 3 euros). But the real star is the breakfast buffet, a smorgasbord guaranteed to give you energy for the day with breads made in the hearth of a traditional Azorean oven, locally churned butter, jam made from roasted island pumpkins, tea from São Miguel's Gorreana plantation—which you can also visit—and creamy island cheeses, each with a distinct flavor reflecting the grazing grounds of the cows (which are everywhere, as there's a bovine resident for every human on the islands).

Few of those Azorean products are exported, which makes for a delightful farm-to-table experience at even the most low-key of restaurants. Want a juicy steak, flame-broiled to perfection for lunch for just under $12? Simply cross the street from the hotel to the pier and enjoy that and a side of hand-cut potatoes at Cervejaria Docas. Or take advantage of the Azores' proximity to the ocean with a truly unforgettable meal at Saca Rolhas Taberna, a mom-and-pop spot where owner Fernando Soares will bring the day's catch tableside for you to inspect before ordering. Don't miss out on the fresh tuna steak with olive oil and roasted garlic, lovingly served with excellent Portuguese wines.

One of São Miguel's most unique dishes requires a drive from Ponta Delgada to the geothermal grounds of Furnas, where locals and chefs use steam from the hot springs to cook cozido: steaming plates of hearty meats and vegetables. Walk it off with a stroll through the amazing botanical gardens of the Terra Nostra hotel or a float in the geothermal pools, all accessible for just a few dollars if you're not a hotel guest.

A half-hour flight away, the island of Terceira offers up its own cornucopia of outdoor activities, with coasteering (exploring rocking coastlines with jumping, swimming and climbing), horseback riding, hiking, hot air ballooning, whale watching and more. After a little exercise, you can unwind at Terceira Mar Hotel, where each room, common area and indoor and outdoor pool offers up views of the Atlantic. It's located in Angra do Heroismo, the oldest city in the Azores, a UNESCO World Heritage Site dotted with colorfully painted homes and winding cobblestoned streets leading down to the shore; it has all the charm of Cinque Terre but without the crowds. Local guide Miguel Mendonça of TuriAzores can give you the skinny on the area, regaling you with the history of the 19th-century Duke of Terceira Garden and revealing where to enjoy alcatra, the hearty roast made in unglazed clay pots with onions, bacon and wine that is the trademark dish of this island. Ti Choa is one of the best options, and it's easy to see why visitors and locals alike make reservations at the restaurant months in advance. Belly up with one of several island families here and tell them where you're from, and undoubtedly someone will delight in telling you about relatives in Fall River or New Bedford. With a large wave of immigration in the '60s that brought many to Massachusetts for maritime opportunities, there's still a strong connection between the States and the Old Country.

After a week in the Azores, one thing is sure—you'll feel one too. ◆

STEALTH BOMBER

COMMUNE KITCHEN SERVES TWO STUNNING SPECIALTIES FROM A HUMBLE SPOT

AS EVERY LOCAL FOOD GEEK KNOWS, THE joys in Boston's dining scene are not limited to soigné downtown spots with extensive menus and glam rooms. Our suburbs are dotted with culinary riches too, and talented chefs with a tight focus on a few items can be found working out of food-court stalls and food trucks all across Greater Boston. The true chowhound's nose is open to the scent of excellence in many forms. Follow it, and you may stumble on a new spot like Commune Kitchen, which is serving a menu dominated by pizzas and tartines out of an unprepossessing storefront on a quiet street near Arlington Center.

The tartine (rhymes with sardine), an open-faced sandwich by any other name, seems like an odd choice to devote half your menu to. How good can a single slice of bread with a few toppings be? It helps to start with good bread, and Commune bakes astonishing bread, thanks to co-owners Justin Demers and Richard Niedzwiecki's experience at Brookline's Clear Flour Bread, one of Greater Boston's finest boulangeries. It is a simply transporting half whole-wheat sourdough boule, long fermented from a Lactobacillus sanfranciscensis starter, yielding a stiff crust and tender crumb. Every customer should take home a loaf ($7 whole, $4 half). For the tartine, Demers slices this great bread thick, grills it gently and tops it with pristine ingredients prepared and assembled with an artistry that reflects the fine-dining chops he honed at Somerville's beloved indie Bergamot.

For your late breakfast, there's a bacon and eggs tartine ($7.25) topped with thick, crisp bacon, delicately soft-scrambled eggs, pimiento cheese that actually tastes of briny/hot pimientos, fresh cilantro and caramelized onions brilliantly sweetened with brown sugar and given smoky heat with Spanish pimentón. Charcuterie tartine ($7.75) tops creamy beef-liver mousse and a beautiful, fat-wrapped slice of pâté de campagne with a squiggle of sweet blackberry preserves, a few leaves of arugula and a sprinkling of sea salt. Cherry crunch tartine ($7.25) could serve as dessert (or a breakfast for the waffles-and-syrup set) with its topping of housemade almond butter, macerated cherries, drizzle of dark chocolate and chunks of honeycomb crunch: toffee-like caramelized honey given a bubbly texture with baking soda. This level of refinement needs a fancy French moniker.

Twelve-inch pizzas similarly benefit from Commune's cunning way with long-fermented dough, which produces a fantastically bubbly, lightly charred crust of medium thickness in the middle and a tall outer rim. The simple cheese pizza ($9.75) offers a thicker-crusted version of the Neapolitan classic margherita pie of fresh mozzarella, piquant marinated tomatoes, fresh basil and a judicious shower of olive oil. Another $1.50 adds a blanket of quality thin-sliced, large-bore pepperoni. The vegetarian pie ($11.50) is surprisingly fierce, topping a gentle white sauce with lightly grill-blackened and acerbic broccoli rabe, a load of dark cremini mushrooms, toasted pine nuts with a popcorn-like flavor and crunch and an insistently fragrant thyme gremolata. Porchetta pizza ($11.50) features slices of superb slow-roasted pork shoulder rolled around layers of herbs, garlic and breadcrumbs, counterpointed by the black-peppery zip of fresh parsley and the lovely acid and heat of pickled cherry pepper, some bland kale doing no harm. Meatball pizza ($11.50) is another stunner: rich beef meatball halves atop good red sauce, a bright pesto, little slices of summer squash, a few curls of crisp onion strings and a lot of finely shaved parmesan.

Two sides are built on excellent french fries: Seasoned house fries ($5.50) are good by themselves with their BBQ-chips-like seasoning, better dipped in garlic/herb aioli, while the dauntingly generous plate of poutine ($7.25) comes with copious chunks of squeaky housemade mozzarella, a velvety beef gravy and sliced scallions. The carb-averse have one option, a vibrant grilled romaine salad ($7.25) dressed in a Green Goddess-like creamy chimichurri and dotted with fresh corn niblets, red onion, goat cheese and chives in a portion big enough to be meal-sized.

Outside of lunch and dinner, Commune serves as a free-Wi-Fi-equipped cafe built for lingering, with a battery of serviceable drip and espresso coffee drinks ($1.25-$3.25), teas ($1.75-$3.50), sodas flavored with Italian syrups ($2.50) and housemade soft drinks like a bracing, fizzy blackberry lemonade ($3.25). The handful of sweets include a terrific chocolate croissant ($3) and big cookies like a zingy gingersnap ($2.50). The two rooms have a charmingly shambling feel, with their mustard stucco walls, clunky chandeliers, ceramic-tile tables left over from the previous Mexican-restaurant tenant, church pews for banquettes, antique mirrors, random thrift-store art, comfy but worn armchairs and a free lending library.

A couple of sidewalk two-tops provide a sunny view of Commune's placid residential surroundings. You'll order at the counter and bus your own table. The place has an unmistakable neighborhood feel: There's always a family with a small child in the room and locals moseying by to get the paper and a scratchie at the nearby convenience store. It is hard to imagine a non-local driving by and thinking, "That little Commune Kitchen joint looks like it might be hiding something amazing." Kudos to you if you have that kind of instinct, but even if you don't, now you know it does too. ◆

Q: I'M IN MY MID-THIRTIES AND I CAN ALREADY SEE THE BEGINNING OF JOWLS LIKE MY MOTHER HAD. CAN I PREVENT THIS?

A: As we age we loose fat in the upper part of our face. The fat pads start to diminish and simultaneously slide down the face creating jowls in the lower part of the face. Years ago the only answer was a facelift, but now there are alternatives to surgery. This loss of facial fat can't be prevented, it is a natural part of the aging process, but we can manage the process so that your appearance remains relatively unchanged for many years.

One method is to inject Juvederm Voluma or Restylane Lyft, safe and effective hyaluronic fillers, near the cheekbones to replace the fat that we have lost. This added volume subtly lifts the skin in the lower face and voila: the jowls disappear. The injections are not painful, the results are very natural looking, and will last for up to two years.

A BOY AND HIS BEAST

DISNEY'S NEW CLASSIC IS A LATE-SUMMER SURPRISE, SOARING ABOVE THE COMPETITION.

IN A SUMMER THAT'S BEEN NOTABLE FOR ITS string of money-losing box-office busts, most of them sequels, along comes a late-season entry in that other feared genre: the reimagining of a kiddie-film classic. Only this time, even fewer people would accuse the source material of even being a classic. Mind you, the studio behind Pete's Dragon—a remake-in-name-only—is Disney, which has been increasingly successful in updating old hits from its animation catalog, retooling these time-honored stories to serve a live-action milieu, albeit one enhanced with the latest CGI wizardry.

But here's the thing with 1977's Pete's Dragon: The idiosyncratic musical already took place within a live-action world, populated by actors like Mickey Rooney, Red Buttons, Shelley Winters and Jim Backus—hammy performers whose best work was long behind them. Nevertheless, child viewers responded to the story of 8-year-old orphan Pete (Sean Marshall) and his larger-than-life sidekick, the titular hand-drawn dragon Elliot, while overlooking the fact that director Don Chaffey's live-action/animation hybrid was kind of awful.

Which is why it comes as such a shock that Disney's latest is, hands-down, the best revival the studio has produced. Indie writer/director David Lowery and co-writer Toby Halbrooks have dropped the cartoonishness of the earlier film's live action and animation in favor of a heightened realism, removing nearly everything save the names of young Pete and Elliot. Gone are the musical production numbers and the early-1900s Maine setting, replaced by a more timeless backdrop that should be familiar to anyone who's seen the films of Terrence Malick or Robert Altman.

Pete's Dragon is both beautiful (Bojan Bazelli's widescreen lensing deserves to be seen on the biggest screen you can find, in 3-D, if available) and a narrative triumph, one that shares a bit of DNA with an animated Disney classic that thankfully hasn't been remade: Bambi. That 1942 film and 2016's Pete's Dragon both begin with the tragedy of losing parents before focusing on the journey of finding a new family. As 5-year-old Pete (Levi Alexander) sits in the back seat of his parents' car, thumbing through a picture book about a boy and his dog, Elliot Gets Lost, a deer darts in front of their car on the secluded forest road, orphaning the young boy in an instant. Wandering from the wreck, Pete is nearly devoured by wolves that circle around him in the dense woods, but he's saved by the magical dragon he takes to calling Elliot, after the puppy in his storybook.

Disney's latest is, hands-down, the best revival the studio has produced.

This is a very different dragon than the one Don Bluth animated in Chaffey's film, not a special effect but another character. As Pete reaches out and pets the green fur on the back of Elliot's outstretched palm, the hairs that cover nearly every inch of Elliot's frame stand on end, his emerald color brightening as an unspoken bond is formed between the two.

The story jumps ahead six years and we hear the unmistakable voice of Robert Redford, playing a grizzled old woodcutter who tells a timeworn tale of a dragon he encountered as a boy—the only other human to have seen Elliot—to an audience of children in this fictional Pacific Northwest town. But he's interrupted by his grown daughter Grace (Jurassic World's Bryce Dallas Howard), a preservation-minded park ranger who loves her dad but wishes he'd focus on the real world.

Returning to the woods, we're reintroduced to Pete (now played by Oakes Fegley), long-haired and filthy. The 11-year-old runs through the forest in a loincloth, much like Mowgli ran through the jungle in Jon Favreau's recent, fantastic remake of Disney's 1967 animated favorite, The Jungle Book. But while that film was backed by a blockbuster budget of $175 million, Lowery's film was produced for a comparably meager $65 million. You'd never know it. This picture looks wonderful, from the natural environments shot in New Zealand to the seamlessly naturalistic effects work by Weta Digital. Their artistry extends to the canine quality of Elliot, who chases his own tail when he's not running through the woods playing fetch with a tree trunk. But Pete and Elliot's idyllic play is interrupted by Grace, whose lyrical humming triggers something in the boy, who presumably hasn't seen another human being in six years. Pete is drawn to her maternal presence, staying just out of her line of sight, even as he snatches her metal compass, a sentimental heirloom that inadvertently sets Pete down a new path.

When deforestation efforts threaten to encroach upon Pete and Elliot's makeshift home within a massive tree, the nearly feral boy is tempted to venture from the wilderness paradise he shares with his best friend, setting the stage for a lovely movie that's best described as magical. Rarely manipulative and aided by a tender, down-home musical score by Daniel Hart that occasionally soars under Elliot's spread wings, Pete's Dragon is not only one of the summer's best surprises, but a new Disney classic. ◆ plays Great Scott on Aug. 31.

Music / Paul Robicheau

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

A BERKLEE ALUM MIXES STYLE AND CULTURE INTO TOPICAL COLLAGES.

"Mexican Chef" shares the dirty work that minorities do to drive America, served with a spicy snap as the signature dish on Berklee alum Xenia Rubinos' slyly subversive second album, Black Terry Cat. And she doesn't mince words with that track's lines "Brown cleans your house. Brown takes the trash. Brown even wipes your granddaddy's ass."

"I'm not being preachy and I didn't set out to make an album that's political," the Connecticut native says from her Brooklyn home. "I was just saying some stuff that was on my mind—and on all of our minds."

As race relations became a flashpoint in the national conversation, Rubinos says she noticed a pattern while walking past New York restaurants. Latinos prepped in back, listening to their music, while mostly white waiters oversaw a different scene. And it wasn't just Mexican restaurants. "It just made me laugh, like 'That's the French one and that's an Italian restaurant,' " she says. "The same theme was repeated: It was this front face, and then this back engine that made it work."

Rubinos says she appreciates how Louis C.K. gets people to mull difficult topics through comedy. And "Mexican Chef" truly works because of her playful, sinuous delivery, her pastiche of jazz, soul, R&B and hip-hop cut by the wicked backbeats of drummer/producer Marco Buccelli, who she met a decade ago at Berklee.

She drops more food for thought on the other tracks of Black Terry Cat. In "See Them," she sings, "Where you gonna put the brown girl now? She's tearin' it up," while "I Won't Say" quotes jazz singer Abbey Lincoln's 1966 essay "Who Will Revere the Black Woman?" with lines like "Whose nose is too big? Whose mouth is too loud? Whose butt is too broad?"

"It's another side of what an American experience can sound like and look like."

"I thought, 'This is so relevant today,' " Rubinos says, "and how beautiful to say those things as only she could, about feelings of inadequacies, like the elephant in the room, and feelings we've all had, universally, regardless of our ethnicity or where we live."

Growing up in Hartford, Rubinos gravitated to jazz. She heard Lincoln's music as a child ("She was the soundtrack of my weekends, just hanging out with my mom, cleaning the house") and John Coltrane and Miles Davis through a summer arts program as a teenager.

Berklee opened other doors. "I went there to be a jazz singer—I was gung-ho about that—but I couldn't find my own voice," says Rubinos, who admired Nina Simone and Billie Holiday. "I quit singing for a while and just started listening to as much music as I could and learned a little about writing and arranging for horns."

She found a sympathetic, syncopated foil in drummer Buccelli. "He just loves developing a song, and I think that's what's kept us working so long," Rubinos says. "I trust him because I know he's trying to hear what I'm hearing."

Buccelli co-produced her bilingual 2013 debut, Magic Trix, developing their cut-and-paste and loop-based approach in the studio (they'll add a guitarist and bassist at Great Scott on Aug. 31). But for June release Black Terry Cat, they expanded the palette and dropped the Spanish, drawing from such influences as Sly & the Family Stone, Rufus with Chaka Khan, hip-hop pioneer J Dilla and Gabriel Roth's minimally mic'd Daptone productions. Rubinos says she wanted a more "vocal-centric" album. And in addition to keyboards, which anchored Magic Trix, she wrote and recorded on bass.

"The approach was similar in terms of picking up an unfamiliar instrument to write the music on," she says. "I was also challenging myself to look at lyrics a bit more and what I was meaning to say... to be more intentional in my lyric writing."

Despite that, she sometimes still surprised herself. "If I was trying to write a song like 'Mexican Chef,' I probably wouldn't have been able to," Rubinos says. "[As] a first-generation daughter of Puerto Rican and Cuban parents who's making this music that's not folkloric and not preservationist of any of those cultures... It's another side of what an American experience can sound like and look like, and I guess that's why it can be exciting and important to talk about." ◆

COLOR ME BAD

WHILE SAFER THAN UV RAYS, A SPRAY TAN OFFERS CURIOUS NEW COMPLICATIONS

I'VE NEVER BEEN TAN. IN FACT, AT A RECENT pool party, a friend of mine declared, "You might be the palest man on the face of the earth." My look was perfect a few years ago, when vampires were in fashion, but the post-True Blood world doesn't have room for a sallow complexion. And I'm so white, ghosts worry that I have a vitamin D deficiency.

But there's nothing I can do. Pigment is a figment of my imagination. My melanin is hella thin. My epidermis looks like a stormtrooper thermos. There's only one option that I've never tried, a personal-grooming boundary that I dared not cross. I'm talking about getting a spray tan.

I think you see yourself as either someone who spray tans or someone who doesn't. Consider our famous spray-tanners: Snooki, Trump, Oompa-Loompas. A spray tan implies a certain level of ambition—to be famous, to be president, to perform choreographed dance routines in a megalomaniac's supernatural candy dungeon. But I've never been ambitious enough to get hosed down with dye in pursuit of an aesthetic. It's just easier not to, you know?

But it's time for a change. I'm entering the Olympics of Questionable Judgment and going for the bronze. My wife, Heather, is a nurse practitioner, so the first thing I do is approach her with my spray tan safety questions. Namely: Spray tanning can't be good for you, right? "I doubt you'll die from getting a spray tan," she replies. With the medical establishment firmly on board, I head to my local tanning emporium to get sprayed.

As I walk into the store, I'm terrified—both of the potential orangey outcomes and, more acutely, that I'll run into someone I know. The guy at the front desk gets right to the point and asks whether I want light, medium or dark. I'll take the medium roast, please. I note that this fellow does not look outrageously tan, which I interpret as a good sign. He's not getting high on his own supply.

Any housepainter or auto-body guy knows that prep is the biggest part of the job, and apparently the same holds true when you're painting yourself. You don't want tan palms or tan fingernails or tan soles of your feet, so you rub a spray-blocker cream on those areas. You put on lip balm and wear a paper hairnet, being careful to cinch it high and tight to avoid a horizontal line across your forehead. The Tan Man also advises me to rub a light layer of the cream on the back of my hands, so I get some color but not the full saturation. In addition to all that, Heather told me to wear my least-favorite pair of flip-flops and stand on top of them in the booth, because otherwise you're standing in a puddle of man dye and your feet will turn orange, cream or no cream. There's a lot to remember.

SPRAY IT FORWARD
Pro tip: When it comes to a spray tan, the prep is as important as the main event.

Inside the booth, there are footprints on the floor labeled with numbers one through four. The idea is that you do a little one-man dance, twirling in a circle like a vertical human rotisserie while the tanbot blasts you with bottled sunshine. "When my back's to the jets, I turn my hands so that my palms face forward," says my tanning sherpa, demonstrating the move. "And when you're facing forward, you want to just close your eyes and hold your breath." This all sounds like a lot to remember for someone who considers "My drink and my two-step" to be an overly complicated dance.

My guide bids me farewell; I disrobe and enter the chamber. I'm so freaked out about standing naked in a strip-mall paint booth that I forget my flip-flops, a misstep that I realize only after a robotic female voice has advised me that tanning is about to commence. I close my eyes, hold my breath and feel the spray guns start low at my feet and begin working their way up. I panic that I won't be able to hold my breath long enough. But after a few more seconds, the spray stops and the robo-voice says, "Blarrhh burr urhg urgh right, then mrrrgh yurn blarg." What? There's a roaring fan that's drowning out her commands. Did she say turn right to positions 2 and 4? Or left? Do the drink and the two-step? I breathe through my nose and try not to inhale the tan juice, which somehow smells like a real tanning booth, which is to say like someone trying to Febreze a pile of burning hair.

After a minute or two, I'm done. And a day later, I'm ever-so-slightly tan, my Twilight-level whiteness apparently canceling out most of the dye job. I feel confused—ashamed of my cheesy narcissism yet also pleased to be beige for once in my life. I don't know whether to fist-bump to some EDM or talk to a therapist. Gym, tan, laundry! What's become of me?

Like it or not, I've joined the ranks of the spray tanners. I have no regrets. Well, maybe one. I think that if you're gonna go, you may as well go dark. ◆

KILLER INSTINCTS

THE COMIC SOUNDS OFF ON HER EMERSON DAYS, HANDLING HECKLERS AND HER NEW STAND-UP SPECIAL

COMEDIAN ILIZA SHLESINGER, 33, WAS RAISED IN Dallas and graduated from Emerson College. A film major, she moved to Los Angeles to pursue her stand-up career, and she's the only woman, and the youngest comedian, to win NBC's Last Comic Standing. Her debut one-hour comedy special, War Paint, was named one of iTuncs' Top 10 Albums of 2013, and her 2015 follow-up, Freezing Hot, prompted Esquire to name her one of the country's top working comedians. On television, she's hosted the CBS syndicated comedy dating show Excused and the TBS game show Separation Anxiety. She created and stars in a digital series, Forever 31, on the ABCd platform and will release a book, Girl Logic, in 2017. Her newest stand-up special for Netflix, Confirmed Kills, premicres on Sept. 23.

JONATHAN SOROFF: You recently did a tour of the U.K. Did the humor translate?
ILIZA SHLESINGER: Absolutely. They had trouble with the English, but we got through it. I think my humor is pretty universal. I'm not talking about flying on private jets or saying, "Don't you hate it when Vikings come in and raid your village and kill your parents?" It's easy societal stuff. Men and women are the same everywhere. For the most part, girls feel the same everywhere. So it's pretty easy and accessible.

Biggest way your comedy has evolved? Well, I started in my 20s, and what are you gonna talk about? What you know. Drinking. Maybe dating. So with this latest special, given the chance to do a third Netflix special, I felt I had an obligation not just to comment on what women are thinking, because I'm kind of known for that. I wanted to give credence to our thought process and stand up for girls. I wanted to have a little more compassion and understanding, although some girls are bitches.

Favorite venue to perform in? My comedy is very big. I occupy the space a lot. I enjoy a big crowd. Whether it's 1,000 or 3,000 people, it feels the same. Not that I've done an arena tour, but big crowds feel comfortable to me. I like that energy. That being said, when I get the opportunity to do a more intimate venue, that's when you get the chance to do some experimentation and digging. You can do those calmer or deeper jokes and do some real work.

Worst part of touring? Literally everything except the moment you walk onstage to the minute you walk offstage. But I'm actually built for it. My dad was a road warrior. And I love my fans. Sorry, Beyoncé, but I have the best fans in the world. They're rabid; they make GIFs and they make T-shirts. And I love putting my art out there and seeing how they make it their own. I love when someone in Denver says, "I saw you perform in Bagram or Kandahar [with the USO]." They made it back alive. It gives me chills. And it's cool to get to know the country.

Does Emerson secretly rule Hollywood? First rule of Emerson College is you don't talk about Emerson College. Kidding. We're not "ruling" Hollywood, but to quote Fight Club, "We're the people who do your laundry and cook your food and serve your dinner. We make your bed. We guard you while you're asleep." Emersonians aren't doing any real grunt work like that, but we are in every production office, on every executive team, in every writer's room, part of every TV show and at every comedy club. We are everywhere!

Most inappropriate thing you ever did on Boston Common? I have a specific memory of making my sophomore year film on a Bolex in the snow, ugh. It wasn't inappropriate but it was really fucking hard.

What was your parents' reaction when you told them you were becoming a comedian? I don't remember, but that's also because: A) I didn't care what anyone thought, and B) I never for one second thought they wouldn't support it. My parents are these witty, funny New York Jews, and they've always been supportive, whether I was in a sketch group or writing a play or anything I wanted to do creatively. So either they saw it coming, or they thought, "OK, we're here for you. How much money do you need to borrow?" And it was $1,000 for a computer, and I paid it back. My mom raised me to be very independent. The day I got to LA, I got a job. I've always been self-sufficient, so for anyone to tell me what to do or not to do is a very foreign concept to me.

Was there ever something you said on stage that shocked your parents? No. On stage, I am very much who I am off stage. I say "fuck" a lot. And of course, a good dick joke every once in a while is a good thing. But my voice has never been a particularly crass one. I think society tends to think that anytime a woman is both speaking and walking, she's out of line. I've had less intelligent people say, "Oh, you're so bawdy and raunchy!" And I'm like "I don't recall describing my vagina in detail." That's fine if that's your thing, but people have a hard time wrapping their minds around a woman saying the same stuff a guy would say. Now that that little diatribe is over, the only thing that got to my mother was a joke I made about silk blouses being burkas for American women. My mom really took umbrage at that. She was like "I love an elegant silk blouse."

"I think society tends to think that anytime a woman is both speaking and walking, she's out of line."

How do you deal with hecklers? Well, my act is very rapid-fire, so I have to decide whether it's worth breaking the momentum to address them, and usually it's not. Also, a lot of the time, the rest of the audience can't hear the heckler, so if you address someone or snap at someone, it's sort of like lashing out into a void, and you kind of lose the audience for a second. It looks like you're just yelling at a wall.

You hold the microphone in an unusual way. I do. Rappers hold the microphone like that. I guess it's just that there's such an aggressiveness to my comedy. I want to be in your mind. I hunch over and try from the stage to get as close to you as possible, and there's so much tension. And I want you to get me. There's nothing casual about my set. There's a toughness to it. But maybe it's just that I listened to too much hip-hop growing up.

Does comedy always come from a place of pain? I don't think so. It can, and it helps if something horrible has happened to you. But sometimes it's just a way to work out a grievance with society or to question the status quo and ask "Why?" I think that's why a lot of comics are Jewish, because our religion teaches us to always ask "Why?" ◆

LIVE, LAUGH, LOVE, LAUGH

The relationship between Ron Swanson and Tammy II on Parks and Recreation was a love story (or lack thereof) for the ages. Off-screen, real-life spouses Nick Offerman and Megan Mullally are equally entertaining... if slightly less dysfunctional. The comedy power couple stops in town this month on their Summer of 69: No Apostrophe tour, which has the pair stripping down their celebrity trappings to reveal the very real kinks (winky face) of their marriage. Featuring adult-themed musical numbers, filthy banter and very candid storytelling, this is a family act for which parents might want to leave the kids at home. Get marriage counseled when the very funny duo drop by the Wilbur Theatre on Aug. 26. / Grace Li

PRETTY IN PINK Those infamously taeky (and Mass.-invented) plastie lawn flamingos have nothing on the shocking sleaze of pink-trailer-living Babs Johnson in writer and director John Waters' Pink Flamingos. Produeed on a $10,000 budget, the 1972 film embodies what Waters ealled "good bad taste," the kind of black eomedy that earned "The Prince of Puke" an avid eult following. Through seenes shot in the Maryland woods, we follow Babs (played with mile-high eyebrows by drag queen Divine) and her family as they defend their honor from another elan vying for the title of "Filthiest People Alive." Reviews by Brett Michel

CAFÉ SOCIETY ★★1/2 Woody Allen narrates his 47th feature as a writer and director, and for the first time, he sounds as if every one of his 80 years has caught up with him. It's a bit of a shock to hear him sound so labored and drawn, even if we've grown to accept that Allen's late-period writing and directing will more often than not remain fatigued. But while his writing here offers few new insights, his visuals aren't nearly as lethargic; he's working for the first timc with legendary cinematographer Vittorio Storaro, and Café Society is certainly beautiful. Allen's 1930s-set morality tale begins in a sun-kissed Hollywood as influential talent agent Phil Stern (Steve Carell) reluctantly hires Bobby (Jesse Eisenberg), his smart but neurotic young nebbish of a ncphew. That's right: Eisenberg plays Bobby as anothcr in a long line of Allen surrogatcs who have fallen into the trap of emulating their director's mannerisms and vocal inflections—at least during the first half, when Phil passes Bobby off to his personal assistant, Vonnie (an incandescent Kristen Stewart), a Nebraska transplant Bobby falls hopelessly head over heels for. But this is a melancholy film in which dreams are dashed and families shattered; Bobby won't remain the person he was at the beginning. Like Allen though, he'll keep on working, even if his best days are behind him. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

GHOSTBUSTERS ★1/2 Here's a movie that's been taking knocks since it was announced, as misogynistic man-children, armed with fond memories of Ivan Reitman's comedy classic, 1984's Ghostbusters, took to the Internet to decry the notion of a female-led reboot. And even when the first trailer for Paul Feig's film failed to elicit many laughs from general moviegoers, this critic stood firm in his belief that while Feig's brand of comedy rarely translates in two-minute trailers, it shines in two-hour films such as 2011's Bridesmaids and last summer's Spy, both of which featured Feig's comedic ace-in-the-hole: Melissa McCarthy. She's back, alongside Bridesmaids' Kristen Wiig and Saturday Night Live's Kate McKinnon and Leslie Jones, who band together to battle the supernatural. All four actresses are comic spitfires...in other projects. Sad to say, this film never rises above its opening, when a tour guide (Silicon Valley's Zach Woods) informs visitors at a supposedly haunted estate of the New York manor's once-innovative "face bidet" and "anti-Irish fence." Those are funny lines, but the comedy soon stops nearly as dead as the ectoplasm-spewing apparitions that appear. Thor's Chris Hemsworth steals a few laughs as the ghost-busting gals' himbo assistant, but not even the God of Thunder can lend enough sparks to bring this lame film to laugh-filled life. (At Assembly Row, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

HELL OR HIGH WATER ★★★1/2 Director David Mackenzie's crime drama may be set in modern-day Texas, but it's a classic Western through and through, full of moral grays and another towering performance by the gray-maned Jeff Bridges. He's back in Rooster Cogburn-mode as a smarter-than-he-sounds Texas ranger, Marcus Hamilton, a jut-jawed good ol' boy who's equally at home chasing bank robbers as he is hurling racial slurs at his half-Comanche, half-Mexican partner, who loves the old coot anyway. Speaking of those bank robbers, they're a pair of desperate brothers: Tanner Howard (Ben Foster), a gun-happy career criminal who's recently been released from prison, and his younger, smarter brother, Toby (a revelatory Chris Pine), a divorced dad who's always walked the straight and narrow. But when the Howards face losing the land that's been in their family for generations, Toby works out a rather brilliant plan: They'll only rob the registers at each branch of the bank that's threatening to take everything from them. Stealing just a few thousand from each location keeps their crime spree out of federal jurisdiction, so if Hamilton can't catch them, they may just save the family's land after all, paying for it with money taken from the very company that's about to foreclose. Taylor Sheridan's screenplay also robs rather liberally from Cormac McCarthy's work, and it's even better than his script for last year's Sicario. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

INDIGNATION ★★★1/2 A good deal of Philip Roth's piercing humor seeps into debuting director James Schamus' successful adaptation of the Pulitzer Prize winner's 2008 novel (his 29th), but it's easier to detect in hindsight, sincc it's the bleakness of the film and the tragedy of its love story that permeates nearly every frame. It's 1951 and Marcus Messner (Logan Lerman), the bright teenaged son of a Jewish butcher in New Jersey, will soon depart for Ohio to receive a liberal arts education on a full scholarship. "How will you keep kosher there?" asks a woman who has no idea that Marcus will soon be dining on escargots opposite a transfixing blond shiksa (Sarah Gadon) as he embraces his new life as a freethinking atheist. A longtime independent film producer and screenwriter known for his collaborations with Oscar-winning director Ang Lee, Schamus has committed to a style that's very generous to his actors, as demonstrated by the film's stunning centerpiece, Marcus' tête-à-tête with his bête noire, Dean Caudwell, played by Pulitzer-winning playwright Tracy Letts in a volatile two-person scene that takes up 16 minutes of screen time. Schamus also hasn't missed the overriding conclusion of Roth's novel, which observes "the terrible, the incomprehensible way one's most banal, incidental, even comical choices achieve the most disproportionate result." (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Jason Bourne ★★ Matt Damon returns to the series that made him a star (the less said about 2012's Damon-less The Bourne Legacy, the better), and while this is the fourth time the Boston-bred actor has played man of few words Jason Bourne, it's the first time one of his films has felt so perfunctory. Paul Greengrass, director of the second and third installments, 2004's The Bourne Supremacy and 2007's The Bourne Ultimatum, also returns, but the script he's concocted with co-writer Christopher Rouse (his longtime editor) does little but put the former CIA operative through very familiar paces. Sure, there are a couple of large-scale action sequences that should probably thrill longtime fans of the series spawned from the pages of late author Robert Ludlum's books, but our lethal hero isn't nearly as smart this time out, leaving himself exposed near open windows while handling even less smart devices like a thumb drive with the word "ENCRYPTED" printed in big block letters on its side. This is Jason Bourne for Dummies. Sadly, in the era of Trump, this may be enough. Julia Stiles also returns for the fourth time as Nicky Parsons, setting the convoluted plot in motion as we learn exactly one new detail about Bourne, who lacks his usually reliable identity. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Kubo and the Two Strings ★★★1/2 The narration that opens this latest stop-motion marvel from animation house Laika begins "If you must blink, do it now." That's good advice, since if you close your eyes anytime over the course of the 101 minutes that follow, you'll risk missing some of the exceptional artistry that the Oregon-based studio packs into the corners of every frame. The action in its fourth feature takes place in a mythical Japan as first-time director Travis Knight (a lead animator on Laika's previous trio of Oscar-nominated gems, Coraline, ParaNorman and The Boxtrolls) focuses his camera on young Kubo (voiced by Game of Thrones' Art Parkinson). He's the one-eyed son of Hanzo, a legendary samurai who perished while protecting Kubo and his mom from her father, the Moon King (Ralph Fiennes), a vengeful god who stole his grandson's eye and still seeks the other. Kubo, armed only with his shamisen—a stringed musical instrument that magically allows him to breathe life into a tiny origami warrior—is joined by a talking monkey named Monkey (Charlize Theron) and a former samurai turned man-sized beetle named, yes, Beetle (Matthew McConaughey) as they retrieve pieces of Hanzo's mythical armor for Kubo's inevitable showdown with his grandfather. Blink, and you'll miss one of this year's finest family films. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Secret Life of Pets ★★ This family film from Universal Pictures and their computer animation partner Illumination Entertainment (creators of the monosyllabic Minions, stars of a short that precedes the main feature) has become a box-office smash, but creatively, it's splashing around in the shallow end of the pool. Just compare the depth of Albert Brooks' Marlin character in Disney Pixar's latest, Finding Dory, to the sharp-taloned falcon, Tiberius, he plays here. The former displays a full range of human emotions and feelings (even though he's a fish), while the predator he plays here is mostly a cheap gimmick used to mine laughs with the threat of pointless violence and cruelty toward animals that this film from the team of director Chris Renaud and writers Cinco Paul and Ken Daurio (who gave us Despicable Me and its sequel) occasionally pushes too far. The pandering, lazy screenplay recycles the basic structure (but not the emotional center) of Pixar's Toy Story, replacing toys with pets, though we get to see precious little of the animals' secret life, as promised by the title and appealing trailers, which featured the best jokes. Something's very wrong when you hire Louis C.K., one of the smartest comics out there, to voice Max, a dumb dog in a film filled with stupid, crowd-pleasing animals. Woof. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Star Trek Beyond ★★★ Despite fans' early fears that he might be making the Muppet Babies equivalent of Star Trek, producer/director J.J. Abrams resurrected the crew of the U.S.S. Enterprise rather brilliantly in his 2009 reboot of Paramount Pictures' stagnant film franchise, and his genius lay in the casting. Chris Pine, Zachary Quinto, Karl Urban, Zoe Saldana, Simon Pegg, John Cho and Anton Yelchin all perfectly embodied the iconic roles of Kirk, Spock, Bones, Uhura, Scotty, Sulu and Chekov, and the addition of Leonard Nimoy, playing Spock from the old timeline, seemed to thrill old and new fans alike. Sure, the story was fairly boilerplate, but Abrams had successfully relaunched the series, leaving it open to "boldly go" in new directions. Four years later, however, Abrams decided to stealthily remake 1982's The Wrath of Khan, instead—and no one was happy. Now, for Trek's 50th anniversary, Pegg has pulled double duty, co-writing a movie with Doug Jung that feels, for the first time, like an episode of the original TV series. The genius of this film is that new director Justin Lin (from the Fast and the Furious franchise) doesn't just place the crew in well-choreographed action; he and Pegg understand that it's the characters themselves that we're here to see, and we're treated to some of the best interactions since 1986's The Voyage Home. It feels like we've returned home, indeed. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Suicide Squad ★1/2 I hope you liked that extraneous scene that stopped Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice cold, the one where Wonder Woman pauses in front of her computer to watch fan-service video clips that introduced the Flash, Cyborg and Aquaman, because the first reel of writer/director David Ayer's Suicide Squad—which promised to be DC Comics' big-screen equivalent to The Dirty Dozen—is dedicated to introducing us to "the worst of the worst." Amanda Waller (Viola Davis), the ethics-free, bureaucratic head of a secret government agency, flips through a dossier over dinner; one by one, we see photos of the antiheroes she'll eventually bring together as flashes of their backstories are shown, accompanied by a "hip" collection of licensed songs that's been carefully curated to sell soundtrack tie-ins. Sadly, Waller turns out to be much more intimidating than the supervillains she assembles, from "world's deadliest assassin" Deadshot (played with not-so-deadly snark by Will Smith) to Harley Quinn (Margot Robbie, covered in sex appeal and little else), one-time shrink and current girlfriend of the Joker. Speaking of, if you're coming to this film based on the promise of seeing Jared Leto's tatted, grill-toothed take on the Clown Prince of Crime, you're in for a letdown. Barely appearing, he's about as frightening as DC's latest unfocused misfire is entertaining. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

War Dogs ★1/2 Todd Phillips, director of the Hangover trilogy, attempts to make a legitimate film with War Dogs—or at least, he tries to be the next David O. Russell. By this, I mean he's made his own American Hustle, which had Russell in full faux-Scorsese mode. Here, Phillips, his team of writers and editor Jeff Groth have stolen wholesale from 1990's Goodfellas and 2013's The Wolf of Wall Street in adapting Guy Lawson's 2011 Rolling Stone article. Hell, they've even cast The Wolf of Wall Street's Supporting Actor Oscar nominee, Jonah Hill, as one of their two leads. Truth be told, he's the best thing in the movie, delivering lines like "I only sell to one gun nut: the U.S. military," as his morally reprehensible character, Efraim Diveroli, recruits his childhood friend, David Packouz (Miles Teller), to be his partner-in-arms as they luck into a career as high-powered arms dealers. Packouz is positioned as this tale's Henry Hill, narrating the action whenever Phillips stops it with yet another freeze frame—but the former massage therapist never learns his lesson. Phillips and company can't commit to his downfall, instead tacking on a fictional epilogue befitting this entire phony enterprise. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

ALL OF THE LIGHTS

Where does an aspiring rock star go after the mayor of his city names an entire day after him at the tender age of 17? For Gary Clark Jr., the Austin-bred-and-based bluesman who made a name for himself playing the bar and club circuit in his music-centric hometown, the answer was simple: back to work. It was more than a decade till he made his major-label debut, gaining widespread cred with his 2012 smash hit "Bright Lights," a psychedelic, guitar-driven piece of blues mastery that instantly vaulted the singer/songwriter into the national spotlight. Now, Clark is making the rounds on the big-time circuit, stopping in town on a summer tour behind last year's critically lauded The Story of Sonny Boy Slim. Don't forget to wear shades when he hits the Blue Hills Bank Pavilion on Aug. 31. / Alexandra Cavallo

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

DAILY LIFE Debuting on the eve of Japan's official surrender 71 years ago, Ansel Adams' Manzanar: Photographs offers a look at life for Japanese Americans during World War II. The famed landscape photographer visited one of 10 internment camps where 110,000 American citizens were forcibly moved after FDR's executive order. Sometimes perched high above barbed wire in guards' towers, Adams captured everyday goings-on: nurses in uniform, farmers tending to crops, children huddled in classrooms and, as seen above, newspaper editors gathered outside their office. Fifty of the series' images, first published in the 1944 book Born Free and Equal and later exhibited at the MoMA, move to the Addison Gallery of American Art from Sept. 1 through mid-January. / Sarah Hagman

FRIENDS WITHOUT BENEFITS

"Keep your friends close and your enemies closer" is more than just an adage for the subjects of Sebastian Smee's latest book, The Art of Rivalry: Four Friendships, Betrayals, and Breakthroughs in Modern Art, which explores the relationships between eight legendary artists. The Boston Globe art critic paints the friendships of Manet and Degas, Picasso and Matisse, Pollock and de Kooning, and Freud and Bacon, whose relationships were each complicated, to say the least: De Kooning became involved with Pollock's mistress following his untimely death, and Manet once mutilated a self-portrait of Degas and his wife. BENJAMINS FOR HAMILTON

Martha's Vineyard's movers and shakers were out in full force when Lorraine Bressler co-hosted a cocktail party with her daughter, Karen, and son-in-law, Scott Epstein, at their home overlooking Oyster Pond to raise awareness for Community Servings.

The evening attracted the likes of Clinton confidante Dick Friedman, NPR stars Paula Lyons and Arnie Reisman (the island's poet laureate), dyslexia activist Dean Bragonier and his singer/songwriter wife, Sally Taylor, soignee blonde Debby Hale, arts booster Vivian Holland, Swampscott doyenne Josene Steinberg, retired MGH chief of surgery Andrew Warshaw and the delightful Brenda, and so on and so forth.

Watching dusk settle over a saltwater pond, cocktail in hand, certainly doesn't suck, and when you can do it in support of providing hot, nutritious meals to homebound, critically ill people, so much the better.

"How are you doing?" one guest asked another, to which the response was "Well, I've got a musical in Chicago headed for Broadway."

This prompted the evening's best exchange: "I just saw Hamilton."

"How was it?"

"Expensive."

AFTERNOON KEGGER

Even Edith Wharton would have approved of the cocktail party thrown by the Trustees of Reservations to celebrate the restoration of the Chinese Garden at Naumkeag, the historic Gilded Age mansion in Stockbridge.

Part of the Trustees' ongoing 125th anniversary celebration, the afternoon soiree was co-chaired by musical deity Yo-Yo Ma and his lovely wife, Jill Hornor, and it attracted the likes of latter-day Lucille Ball Julia Owens and her Beacon Hillion parents, Biddy and Bob, conservationist extraordinaire Lillie Johnson, investment guru Peter Coffin, Berkshires booster Hilary Deely, Hollywood big shot Carl Sprague, author and historian Pauline Metcalf, the unspeakably chic Susan Paine, the ever dapper Dave Croll and his stunning other half, Victoria, and one sharp-elbowed New Yorker who rudely jostled his way to the front of the line for the bar.

While a dragon dance and other performances entranced in the newly unveiled garden, guests meandered throughout the grounds, designed by 19th-century landscape architect Fletcher Steele. The Chinese theme was further reflected by paper lanterns, live goldfish on all the bars and fortune cookies, some containing door prizes.

"I had a pet mouse named Limousine," said one guest, apropos of pretty much nothing.

However, the afternoon's best exchange was this: "You look fantastic."

"Well, don't look too closely."

LOVE'S LABOUR'S COSTS

Commonwealth Shakespeare Company kicked off its run of free performances on the Common with a cocktail reception at the Parkman House, where people pregamed and hobnobbed in the drawing room of the mayor's official residence.

Present and accounted for: the exquisite Priscilla Douglas, company co-founder Joan Moynagh, bright young things Ashley Wisneski and Will Heward, wild thing Sydney Marshall Turner, porcelain beauty Trevania Henderson and her handsome husband, John, smoking-hot director Saheem Ali, board member Dave Friedman (sporting his World Series ring), dashing theater impresario Tivon Marcus, Boston Ballet head honcha Max Hodges, the ubiquitous Ricardo Rodriguez with his adorable sidekick, Casey Cochran, A.R.T. exec Kati Mitchell and one person who said, "Both my husband and I travel a lot on business, but I go to places like St. Barth and he goes to Stamford, Connecticut."

Once everyone was well-lubricated, they meandered across the street for the outstanding performance of Love's Labour's Lost.

The evening's choicest remark, made by a woman whose daughter got married recently: "The second anyone—the florists, the venues, whatever—find out it's for a wedding, they double the price. I call it the Wedding Industrial Complex." ◆

HARD HITTIN'

I ONLY ATTEND SUPER BOWL PARTIES for the snacks, so as a lifelong non-sports fan, I approach the Patriots issue with some trepidation. But I'm happy to say I found a lot to love in this issue, starting with Matt Martinelli's feature on six of the MVPs working behind the scenes at Gillette Stadium, from the director of concessions responsible for feeding 66,000 fans to the luxury suite manager who walks a marathon's worth of miles while catering to VIPs. Then I got an assist from Ezra Dyer, who delivers our Patriots season preview just the way I like my sports analysis—with plenty of jokes to make the stats go down easy. And I learned some Mississippi slang in Jonathan Soroff's fun interview with our cover subject, Jamie Collins, a high-flying linebacker known for soaring over the Colts' line (not to mention Instagram backflips). And hey, if you're even more football phobic than I am, there are lots of non-sporty finds in this issue, including MC Slim JB's review of a pair of star chefs' new globe-trotting eatery and Meghan Kavanaugh's look at a Poetry Brothel that'll regale you with verse in bed. Happy reading.

WRITE TO BED

THE POETRY BROTHEL BRINGS ITS SEXY SCRIBES TO CAMBRIDGE.

A PRIVATE WORD: Co-founders Stephanie Berger and Nicholas Adamski are bringing their Poetry Brothel to Cambridge's Oberon on Sept. 9.

POETRY IN MOTION

Stephanie Berger is set to sex up the city's poetry scene on Sept. 9, when she'll bring her Poetry Brothel to Oberon for its local debut, allowing guests to enjoy one-on-one readings of original works by their fishnet- and corset-clad authors, affectionately called "whores." As co-founder of the series—born out of boredom at traditional poetry readings in New York—Berger plays the madame, acting as hostess and pairing guests with poets who perform one to three poems per candlelit session in bed in exchange for poker chips. After all, Berger notes, "The very best way to hear a poem is from a lover. ... What better way to do that than in bed?"

The brothel theme is more than a gimmick, says Berger, who wants poets to be paid for their work and took inspiration from turn-of-the-century brothels in New Orleans and Argentina, places where jazz and tango blossomed before they hit the mainstream. "Because brothels are these places where social mores go out the window, for better or worse, there's actually this opportunity for really experimental and avant-garde art to thrive," she says. And thrive it has—her inaugural event in the East Village in 2008 was supposed to be a one-off, but it has since spawned 16 Poetry Brothel chapters across the U.S., Canada, Europe and South America. Already anticipating a successful turnout in Cambridge, Berger says a Boston branch might not be far off.

> "The main thing we want people to walk away with is a sense that they connected with another human being."

Guests at Oberon will recognize some familiar local faces: Harvard professor Steph Burt and former Poet Laureate Robert Pinsky will perform a selection of their works between musical interludes from Hounds on an Island and burlesque and aerial acts from the Lost Boys and Ginny Nightshade. Guests can mingle, sip cocktails and, Berger hopes, have fun celebrating poetry as an art form. "We kind of feel, generally within the Poetry Brothel community, that there just isn't enough intimacy in the world," she says. "The main thing we want people to walk away with is a sense that they connected with another human being and that they experienced art and beauty in a way they hadn't previously." / Meghan Kavanaugh

MEET YOUR MATCH

As the madame, Berger greets guests, explains logistics and plays matchmaker for private readings "based on what they may be looking for poetically that evening," she says. Here are a few of the talents she'll have available for one-on-one time.

MONAH MAYHEM
"She's just this really sassy girl. If there's a group of young females there who I can sense might enjoy a sense of empowerment, she's really perfect for that."

PATRICIO FERRARI
"He writes in like seven languages. I would recommend him to anyone who is maybe international, or English isn't their first language.... He's very intellectual, as well. I might give him to people who I sense are extraordinarily well-educated."

MABEL STARK
"She has kind of a spoken-word background. Her character is almost like Amelia Earhart-themed, like aviation. She's super queer, as well. I might give her to a queer couple that's there or if someone expresses an interest in spoken word specifically."

SMART COOKING

HARVARD SQUARE'S EN BOCA OFFERS AN EDUCATION IN SMALL PLATES.

En Boca
8 Holyoke St., Cambridge

Executive chef Devin Broo's fingerprints can be found on many items on the forthcoming En Boca's menu. The back of the menu, however, is where you can really see his impact. That's where he's added a list of more than a dozen farms, foragers and friends that the restaurant will rely on for sourcing when it opens its doors in the old Sandrine's space in Harvard Square in September. He's also providing definitions for some "words to know," ranging from a couple of sentences about cloumage to a large paragraph about nasturtium.

"It's a bit of an education for people when they go eat," says Broo, a Bar Boulud alum. "They see something they like and they haven't tried, an interesting word or spice they haven't had before."

Broo will have executive sous-chef Ben Lacy, formerly of Ten Tables, by his side as the kitchen turns out Mediterranean-inspired small plates. The menu includes bites such as pardon peppers with a romesco crumb and garden dishes such as slow-roasted beets and charred cauliflower. Dishes in the sea section of the menu include stuffed baby squid and bacalao croquettes, while crispy veal sweetbreads and wood-grilled bavette are part of the land section. A few shareable plates and a selection of charcuterie and cheeses round out the dinner menu.

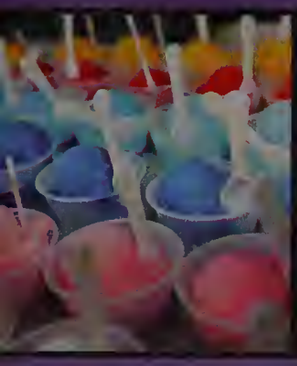
"I like the small-plates style of menu. I think it's a lot more fun and a lot easier for people to be creative," Broo says. "There are a lot of tapas places around, and it's growing. So it's nice to venture away from that a little bit, but at the same time, still have a lot of the good qualities of it."

The space has been overhauled from its previous incarnation, with a 32-seat private dining area downstairs and a 100-seat dining room upstairs. The midcentury design is a mashup of Mad Men-meets-Morocco, according to Broo. The team behind the Asgard and the Kinsale, who had ambitions for a more food-focused spot, tapped him last year to head up En Boca, and Broo couldn't be happier with the concept or the location.

"It was something I stumbled on. When they started explaining it to me, the only aspect that was still to be determined was the menu and the food," he says. "I've never worked in Cambridge. It's an eclectic area with a good clientele."

CHEESE, PLEASE: Gita at Wink & Nod offers a twist on Nepali cuisine.

Good Eats: Paneer and Far



Chef Gita Kantrow, who opened her Gita pop-up at Wink & Nod in August, found the perfect entry point to introducing her native Nepali cuisine to Western diners: fried cheese. "I'm putting a twist on something familiar to home and, at the same time, the food I kind of grew up with here," she says. For her paneer with chana chaat, Kantrow batter fries a block of the Indian curd cheese and serves it atop a traditional cold salad of chickpeas, puffed rice and crunchy noodles. Spices and a yogurt cilantro sauce bring some heat, but the dish finds balance with a date chutney that provides just the right amount of sweetness. / Meghan Kavanaugh

Cambridge-based designer Erin Robertson got one hell of a graduation gift: A day before receiving her MassArt diploma, she learned she'd scored a spot as a contestant on season 15 of Project Runway. We got Robertson on the line to talk style and reality TV dirt before the Sept. 15 premiere. / Alexandra Cavallo

WHAT SURPRISED YOU ABOUT BEING ON THE SHOW? That the timing is real. When you're at Mood, you only have 30 minutes. When you're going down to the runway, you are going down to the runway. Heidi even made a joke about it, like, "You guys are always surprised!"

SO HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE YOUR AESTHETIC? I definitely am into duality, so I love having humor, but also this sense of super seriousness. Flirty, but also really structured—I'm into having these two different worlds coming together as one. I'm usually into a lot of color, humor and sexuality.

IS TIM GUNN AS NICE IN PERSON AS HE SEEMS ON TV? He's nicer. He is the sweetest. And he's very neutral; I didn't see him favor anyone. He's just a very good human being and a very good mentor, because he makes you question yourself in all the right ways. At least for me, it was never like, "Erin, do this." It was just about making me question myself in a really beautiful mentoring way.

BOSTON GETS A BUM RAP FOR BEING UNFASHIONABLE—JUSTIFIED? Oh yeah, for sure. But, like, I don't care! I don't need to be living in a stylish city—I love Boston because there are so many interesting people because of all the colleges. I don't need to be around people that are dressed fashionably for them to be interesting. I'm not a big fan of all the sports gear though. [Laughs.]

BEST OF BOSTON 2014

BOSTON'S BEST 2016

GRENACHE WITH ENVY

Grenache is the least visible of the noble red grape varieties. It goes by many aliases, such as garnacha in Spain (its country of origin) and cannonau in Sardinia. It forms the backbone of such classic blends as Châteauneuf-du-Pape, Priorat and Australian GSM, where the grape labors in anonymity, its name never appearing on the label. Highly versatile in style—ranging from rosé to juicy quaffing-style reds to intense, concentrated blockbusters—it always provides ample berry fruit flavors and aromatic spice, but with moderate tannins and acids. These three are flat-out delicious. / Sandy Block

JOEL GOTT "ALAKAI" GRENACHE, MONTEREY, 2013

This Central Coast wine is a quintessential medium-bodied California grenache, with a soft texture. Ripe blueberry and wild raspberry up front and a distinctive peppery finish. Its sleek, balanced flavors also include cinnamon and milder baking spices, as well as hints of earthy mushroom. It's great with any grilled fish or chicken dish, and you can drink it a bit cooler than your average red.

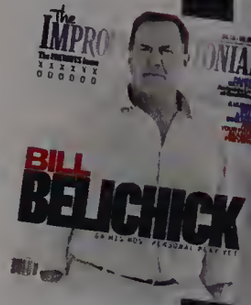
$18, Busa Wine & Spirits, Burlington

ALTO MONCAYO, CAMPO DE BORJA, 2013

Unusually deep in color for garnacha, it has an alluring perfume of exotic spice, black cherry, boysenberry and smoke. Harvested from low-yielding old vines planted between 1920 and 1950 on infertile clay, iron and red slate soils, this is another gem uncovered by the brilliant importer Jorge Ordonez. It's among the most velvety-textured wines I've tasted this year, and it's ultra-polished from two years of aging in new oak barrels.

$47, Wegmons, Chestnut Hill

PALA CANNONAU DI SARDEGNA RISERVA, 2013



Hailing from a family-owned organic winery in Sardinia, this is a savory expression of the grape, with prominent barbecued meat and dried herb notes. A bit on the rustic side, its deep, concentrated dark red fruit flavors burst on the palate with pepper, sage and tobacco accents. Enjoy this with anything bold and hearty such as ribs, sausages and piquant fish stews.

$25, Brix Wine Shop, Boston

Out of 25 YEARS THE VAULT

The Improper is celebrating its 25th anniversary in 2016, and to properly mark the occasion, we're digging through the archives for gems from issues past. Behold, some past Pats highlights, from a cover shoot with Bill B. to that one time The Improper singlehandedly* saved the Patriots from defecting to Connecticut.

1 YEAR AGO
Aug. 19, 2015
OK, so we didn't exactly have to crawl through dust bunnies and cobwebs to retrieve this particular archival highlight, but we'd be remiss if we didn't call out last year's Patriots issue, for which we scored the crown jewel of New England sports stars (barring Tom Brady)—Bill Belichick, who brought the same steely-eyed gravitas to our cover as he does to the field at Gillette.

July 11, 2007
Speaking of Brady, the GOAT got a callout in our '07 Boston's Best issue for his skills off the field. Winning the coveted award of Boston's Best "Baby Daddy," Tom Brady was thusly lauded: "Tom Brady is even more clutch than we thought. The guy's barely found out that he knocked up Bridget Moynahan when rumors start flying about Gisele having a Bündchen in the oven."

Remember when the New England Patriots were almost the Hartford Patriots? No? Probably because we nipped that terrible idea in the bud right quick. In 1998, the team announced a plan to move to Connecticut, to which Improper founder and then-publisher Mark Semonian said, "hell, no," running a "call to action" letter in the front of the issue and inviting the public to come out and join a rally in protest. You're all very welcome.

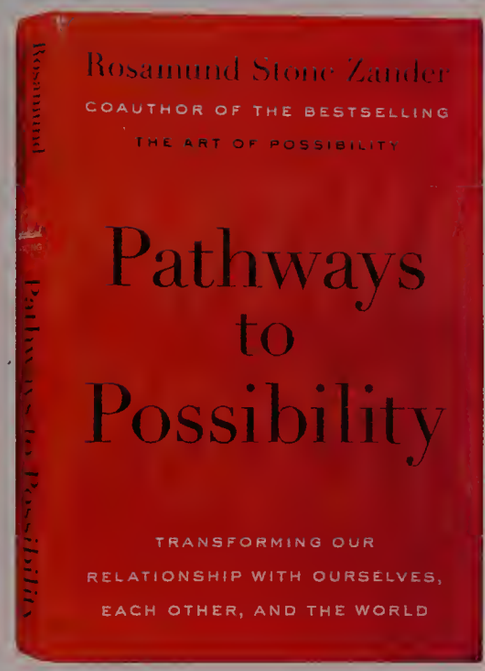
REVISING YOUR LIFE

A LOCAL AUTHOR OFFERS A GUIDE TO CREATING NEW NARRATIVES AND FOCUSING ON THE BIG PICTURE.



HOLLY RIKE

Pathways to Possibility* by Rosamund Stone Zander
Published by Viking, 272 pages, $26

Following up on The Art of Possibility, the 2000 bestseller she co-authored, Cambridge therapist and executive coach Rosamund Stone Zander opens wide skies of optimism and perspective once again. In a spirit combining therapy and Thoreau, she invites us to expand constricting "child stories"—long-held narratives about our lives centered on hurt, anger and victimhood—into more flexible adult stories. That includes seeing oneself not as a solo "doer" but as part of a larger system. For Dr. Willie Smits, subject of one of the book's many anecdotes, that system encompassed the natural world. Working in Borneo with sick orangutans, he led a massive reforestation project in a rainforest devastated by carbon dioxide emissions, helping not only threatened animals, but local people who needed work. "I just followed nature," Smits said of his enormously successful enterprise, which brought back wildlife, agriculture, jobs and, eventually, rain. In this case, the broadest vision was needed, and imitating nature's instructive patterns made everyone a winner.

In another episode, the author looks at how her husband, conductor Ben Zander, helped Jessica, a blind singer standing stiffly in rehearsal, by dancing exuberantly with her, illustrating in space and spirit her greater physical and vocal capacity. Other stories have workshop participants making subtle shifts that release frozen attitudes toward themselves and others, showing how a small change in viewpoint can bring on a big transformation.

From Page 110: Let's posit that there is a spirit in every group or society that is a match for, and resonates with, the self, unbounded and open, that we are able to invent, or perhaps discover, behind our individual walking stories. I imagine a powerful, contributory spirit that is waiting to be recognized, called upon, and set in motion. If we clear ourselves of patterns that block us, listen carefully and speak on key, we may be able to be catalysts for its emergence, like the finger on the glass. The direction of growth in which things want to move may open up for us. ◆

Mark your calendar and plan accordingly: Both Chesterwood and Naumkeag close for the season after Columbus Day.

OUTSIDE THE MUSIC

EARLY FALL IS A FINE TIME FOR EXCURSIONS IN THE BERKSHIRES.

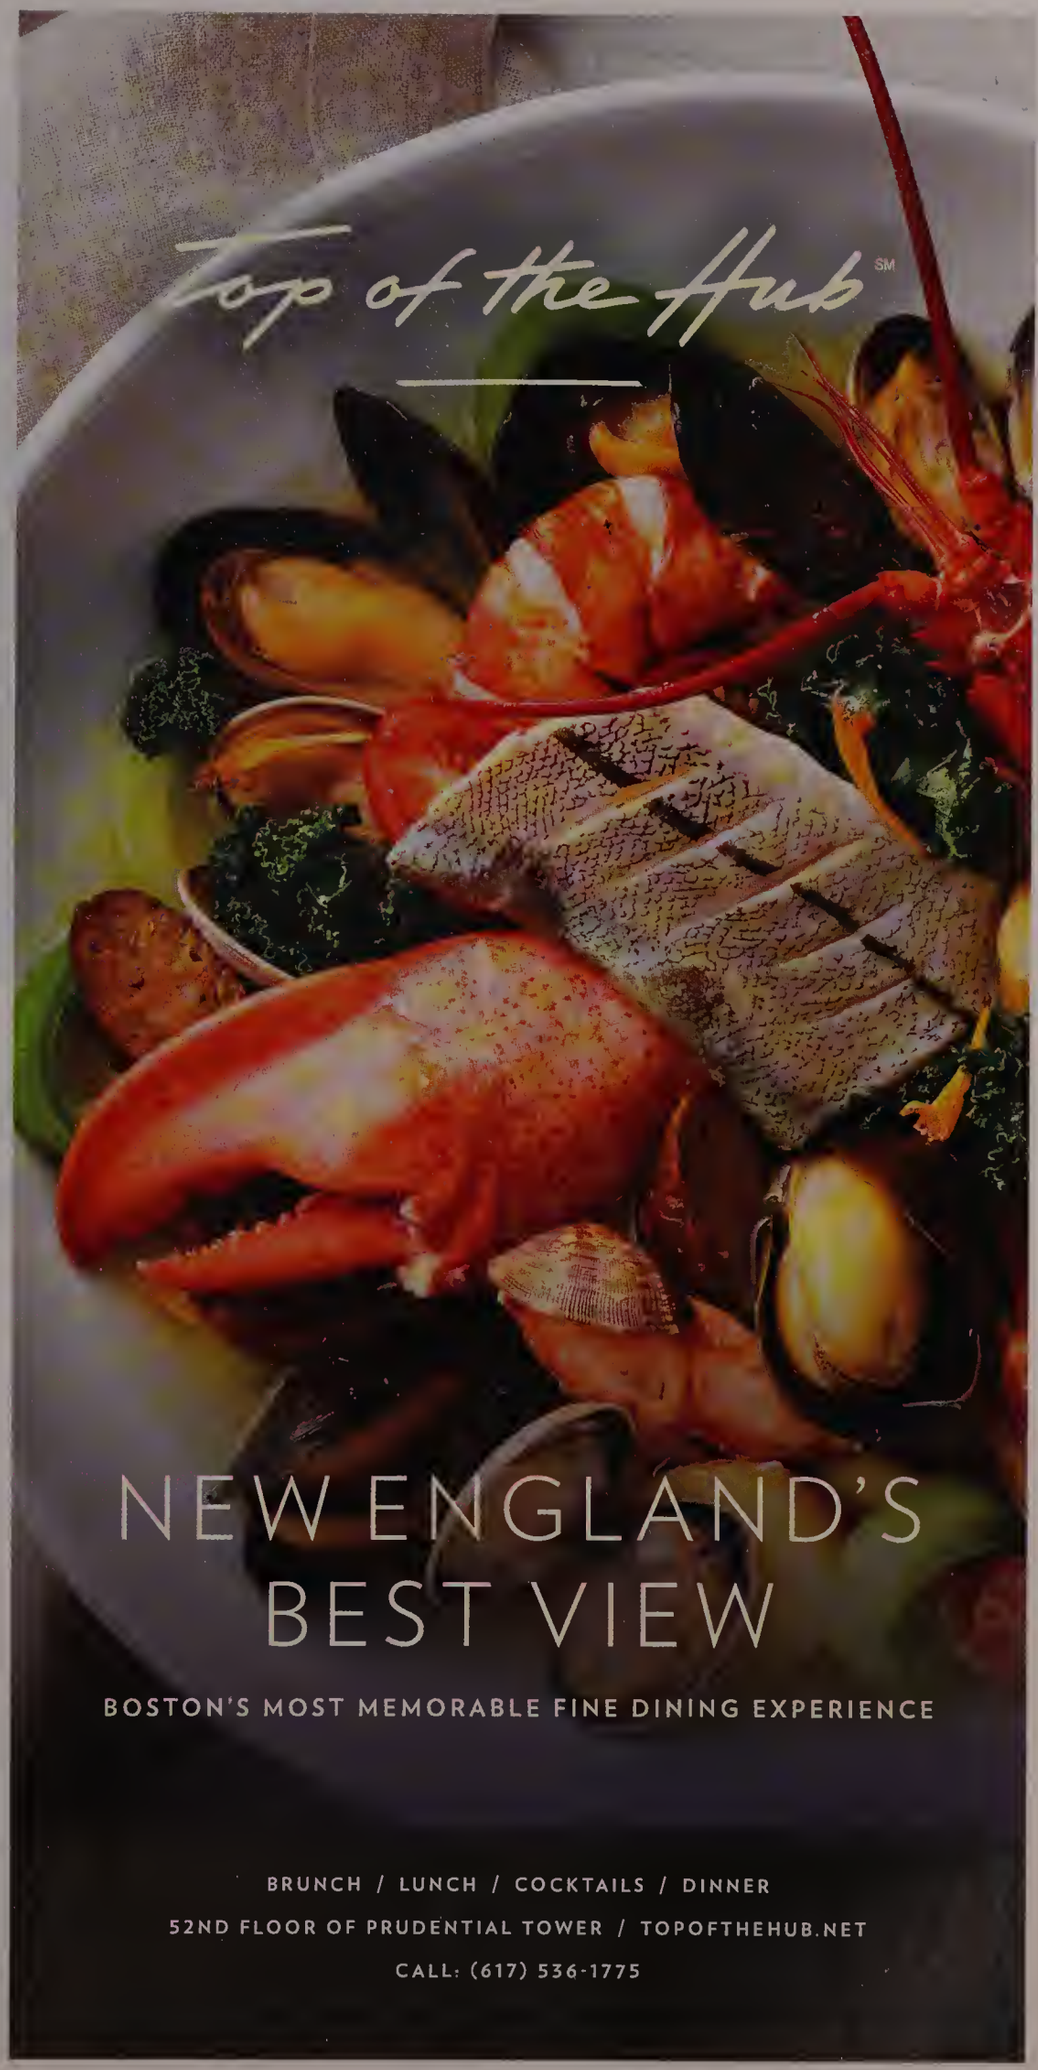
WHEN IT'S SUMMER IN THE Berkshires, all eyes (and ears) are on Tanglewood. Come September, after the final note has been played and the seasonal crowds disperse, it's time to explore some of the area's equally appealing cultural and culinary attractions.

Stockbridge may be best known for the Norman Rockwell Museum, which houses the world's largest collection of original Rockwell art, and as the longtime home of the artist. Born in New York, Rockwell moved to Stockbridge in 1953 so his wife could receive psychiatric care at the Austen Riggs Center; he set up his studio nearby and lived in town for the last 25 years of his life. That studio now sits on the grounds of the museum, where current exhibits include a dive into the midcentury divide between abstract and realist art and a look at Rockwell's more than 300 covers for The Saturday Evening Post. It's well worth a visit, but art lovers shouldn't neglect the Schantz Galleries, a smaller Stockbridge gem featuring glass works by more than 50 contemporary artists, including Dale Chihuly. Elegant, exuberant and brilliantly colorful, these museum-quality showstoppers are beautifully presented in the multi-level gallery, and well-heeled patrons of the arts can even commission installations for their private, corporate or public collections.

Speaking of commissions, Stockbridge is also home to Chesterwood, the summer country house of sculptor Daniel Chester French, who created the Abraham Lincoln statue for the Lincoln Memorial as well as Concord's famous Minute Man. This 122-acre National Trust Historic Site includes the prolific artist's huge studio and expansive gardens, a legacy of his work as a landscape designer. Wear comfortable shoes for an easy hike along the property's wooded trails, and don't miss the museum in the barn; the exhibits provide intriguing historical and cultural context for French's work.

Chesterwood isn't Stockbridge's only grand estate. Architectural history buffs, avid gardeners and fans of the Gilded Age will be entranced by Naumkeag, a National Historic Landmark. Designed in part by Stanford White and built in the late 1800s as a summer retreat for the Choate family, the 44-room mansion actually feels homey, probably because it was bequeathed to the Trustees of Reservations with its original well-worn furnishings intact. Outside, all the gardens—the Chinese Garden, the Tree Peony Terrace, the Evergreen Garden—have been extensively renovated to restore their original splendor. Tours of the house are led by docents, but you may wander the gardens on your own; the panoramic views from both the house and the terrace are spectacular.

NAUMKEAG, GROSS AND DALEY PHOTOGRAPHY; ROCKWELL MUSEUM; BERKSHIRE VISITORS BUREAU



From Stockbridge, it's a half-hour drive to the Old Inn on the Green in New Marlborough, but worth it for the hospitality and the upscale fare. Chef/owner Peter Platt, formerly executive chef at Wheatleigh for a dozen years, cooks with classical technique and rare finesse. Case in point: butter-braised filet of Maine day boat halibut with parsnip puree and Billi-Bi sauce. Dinner is served in a charmingly cozy candle-lit dining room. You can stop by the small but appealing bar for an after-dinner drink before retiring to one of 11 rustic, well-appointed rooms. Built in 1760 as a stagecoach relay, the Inn shows its age with grace. Modern comforts—air conditioning, jacuzzis, plush mattresses—coexist with historic architectural features such as fireplaces and original window glass. The nearby Southfield Store, under the same ownership, provides a dedicated baking kitchen for the Old Inn, turning out delicious pastries and breakfast sandwiches with a plethora of choices: scrambled, sunny side up or fried egg? Rye, multigrain, challah, baguettes or croissant? Cheddar, chèvre, comte? It's all delicious.

Dining options likewise abound in the beautiful town of Lenox. Jae's Asian Bistro—the same Jae's that was once a group of Asian fusion restaurants in the Boston area—makes several varieties of superb bibimbop, the savory Korean iron-pot specialty topped with a fried egg. Across the parking lot from Jae's, Chocolate Springs Cafe uses local milk and cream and organic sugar in treats such as Earl Grey truffles and 85 percent dark chocolate hearts with essential rose oil. The chocolate selection is extensive, there's plenty of comfy seating in the form of leather couches and wooden chairs, and coffee and gelato are also available.

In the center of Lenox, Nudel may be casual, but it's the hottest of hot spots. With fewer than 10 tables and a half-dozen seats at a kitchen-side counter, it's a challenge to snag a reservation. Arrive early, and bring low-maintenance dining companions—Nudel's menu notes that it "does not specialize in vegan or allergy-sensitive foods. We politely decline substitutions and alterations." That prix-fixe menu, which changes daily, is hyperseasonal and inventive, with dishes such as crispy pork croquettes with kale, shallot and garlic and chicken-fried maitake mushrooms with broccoli, lentils, buttermilk and thyme.

If you're on the waiting list for Nudel, or if you prefer to dine later in the evening, check out Brava, a wine bar just around the corner. A friendly neighborhood spot, Brava features a roster of cold and hot small plates (poutine, fried spicy chickpeas, boom boom shrimp) as well as salads (arugula with dried apricots, almonds and four-month Manchego), bruschettas (fresh mozzarella, housemade tomato jam, pesto) and pizzas with toppings such as San Marzano tomato sauce, fennel salami, bacon and wild mushrooms. It's fine fuel for exploring a corner of the Commonwealth that hits all the right notes. ◆

LITTLE DONKEY SKIPS GIDDILY AROUND THE WORLD IN CENTRAL SQUARE

LOCAL CELEB-CHEF TAG TEAM KEN Oringer and Jamie Bissonnette have played it pretty straight at their smash-hit South End restaurants Toro and Coppa, mostly hewing to classic Spanish and Italian idioms, respectively. But at Little Donkey, their third local collaboration, they have abandoned any pretense of coloring inside the lines, creating a free-wheeling, globe-trotting menu that alights variously all over Asia, Europe and the Americas, occasionally fusing elements from distant cuisines. The results are never dull, sometimes charmingly off-kilter and frequently sensational.

Raw bar offers a smashing start, recalling Oringer's recently reinvented UNI in its eclecticism and pristine ingredients. Perfect raw oysters ($3 each) offer individual briny accents from local harbors. In a novel presentation, razor clams ($11) are chopped with jicama, cucumber and pepitas and arrayed on their shells. The gnarly steamed barnacles that are percebes ($19) are helpfully preworked to make extracting the little animals easier; they're delicious with Old Bay mayo if a bit meager in portion. Tuna poke ($14) is simply gorgeous: big ruby-red chunks of raw tuna bracingly dressed in gochujang and crunchily adorned with pickled bean sprouts. Not raw but creatively served, their tops seemingly sliced off with a bandsaw, BBQ jumbo oysters ($14) offer meaty grilled innards, simple and brilliant with a bit of Tapatio-spiked butter. A special of live uni ($38) served with flatbread to be smeared with miso butter and spritzed with lemon is similarly witty, generous and utterly delectable.

You'll notice the theme of awesome breads, like a fantastic rendition of Boston's own Parker House rolls ($8), classically tall, fluffy and butter-glazed, here hiding, bao-like, a tiny inner pocket of Chinese sausage. Air-pocketed black-pepper popovers ($14) are a natural vehicle for fine-textured Wagyu steak tartare, though the beef is underseasoned and overly acidic. But clam garlic bread ($9) is an unqualified smash: loads of chopped clams, garlic and butter atop crunchy ciabatta with a faint whiff of Arab savory and sweet spices. Good, softish rolls accompany the terrifically crunchy-coated pickle-brine fried-chicken sandwich ($14) and a perhaps overly busy burger ($15) of dry-aged beef, buffalo pickles, onion soup mayo, foie gras and jalapeño chips.

A gorgeous cucumber salad ($9) lands somewhere between Greece and Georgia with its feta, spicy peppers and splashes of buttermilk. Vegetarians may opt for charred avocado ($5) with arty squiggles of yogurt and pomegranate molasses, and a lovely red lentil kale dhal ($9) atop jasmine rice and flecked with local summer vegetables. Farro kimchi fried rice ($13) topped with a soft-fried egg and subtle Thai green curry offers similar dreamy comfort with bean sprouts for crunch. Another Subcontinental echo can be heard in monkfish biryani ($16), a complex and fragrant basmati casserole, though the fish gets a bit lost in the mix.

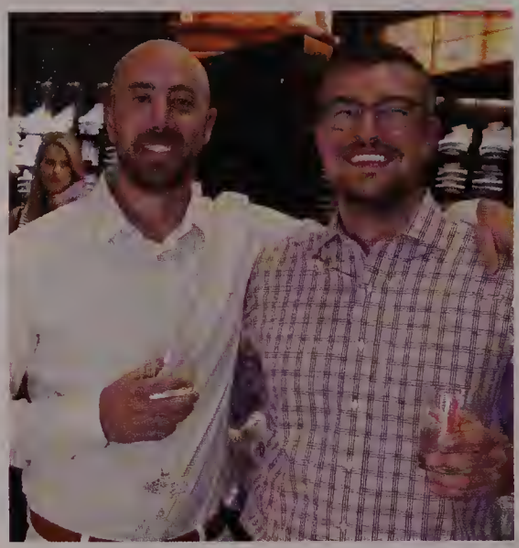
BLT lettuce wraps ($12) offer a delicious game of mix-and-match with a platter of almost candy-sweet lamb bacon, pimiento cheese, tomato jam, pickled red onions and slices of plum. Silver Queen corn ($8) offers an odd off-the-cob riff on Toro's famed elotes, turning the umami knob to 11 with additions of parmesan, bone marrow and giant bonito flakes. Vietnamese bologna ($11) is similarly weird-but-tasty, with a lot of batter-fried squid, peanuts and cabbage providing salty/sweet/savory/semi-crunchy accompaniment to the porky cold cuts—"chef stoner food," as Bissonnette trenchantly describes it.

Pastas similarly veer into unexpected byways, as in the superb, rich version of the Turkish ravioli called manti ($13), stuffed with ground lamb and beef and sauced with garlicky sour cream and red-pepper butter. Matzo ball ramen ($13) has Japanese looks, but the flavors—luscious chicken broth, burnt onion, schmaltz—are all Jewish deli, with a fine dumpling and good spicy chicken. A more traditional lobster fra diavolo ($26), big rigatoni in a fairly spicy vodka sauce, is a good value with its abundant load of lobster meat. Desserts favor sweet-and-salty flavors, as in chicory soft-serve ($8) with peanuts and Thai-tea chantilly. But the winner on whimsy is chocolate chip cookie dough ($9) served on an electric-mixer beater.

Beverage director Jodie Battles has crafted her most interesting program yet: a small-producer-centric beer/cider list with four drafts and 14 cans and bottles ($6-$12); a dozen affordable wines by the glass ($10-$13), including fascinators like Maine's Oyster Rivers Morphos ($11), a cloudy, nearly flat sparkler in the pétillant naturel style; a 39-bottle wine list ($44-$128, most under $65) with plenty of abstruse wineries; and a cocktail program that leans crafty and specializes in gentle riffs on classics, like the Maginot Line ($11), which gives the Manhattan a gingery lilt.



Diners accustomed to Toro's claustrophobic quarters will welcome the generous spacing in the 90-seat dining room and at the 14-seat stone-topped bar, though the need to defend one's drinks and plates against aggressive bussing will be familiar. The airy room, all brick and concrete in whites and grays, with soaring ceilings and windows overlooking still-freaky Central Square, has a pleasantly industrial feel, only verging on painful noise levels at the busiest prime-time hours. That's when the usually-polished service can lag a bit, too, as when we struggled for five minutes to balance a wobbly table. But every server demonstrates verve and depth on a menu that newbies may find daunting. After conquering New York and Bangkok with new Toro outlets, maybe Oringer and Bissonnette finally operating across the Charles shouldn't seem like such a big deal. Given how loose and fun Little Donkey feels, and how neatly it fits its crazy-quilt neighborhood, one may forgive Cambervillians for thinking it is. ◆

Q: DURING THE SUMMER I DEVELOPED SOME BROWN SUN SPOTS ON MY LOWER FACE. WHAT'S THE BEST WAY TO GET RID OF THEM?

A: Brown sunspots, age spots, and freckles develop on the parts of our body that are prone to sun exposure. Luckily, these unsightly spots can be lightened or eliminated with IPL (Intense Pulsed Light) treatments.

IPL, sometimes referred to as a photo-facial, is a safe, FDA- approved method of utilizing flashes of light energy to break up the melanin that forms brown spots. The melanin breaks apart and is absorbed by your body, eliminating the brown spots. The procedure is quick and there is no downtime. The procedure can also clear up brown spots on the chest and hands.

IPL is also used to eliminate broken capillaries or redness in your complexion. It is effective for tiny vessels that look like little streams, as well as general redness, or ruddiness, as is found with rosacea.

FATHER KNOWS BEST

CRAIG ROBINSON SHINES IN THIS FATHER/SON STORY ABOUT STARTING OVER ABROAD.

COMING-OF-AGE TALES MAY BE A DIME a dozen, but writer/director Chad Hartigan sweetly subverts cliches with his latest charmer, an unassuming crowd-pleaser that doubles as a fish-out-of-water comedy. Morris from America may be small in scale, but it's big in heart, and much of the credit for this goes to the believably messy father/son dynamic that serves as the picture's lifeblood.

The titular character, whom we'll come to know as "Mo," is a slightly doughy 13-year-old, one of "only two brothers in Heidelberg," as his doting but mostly absent father, Curtis, puts it after uprooting the pair from the Bronx and transplanting them to Germany. Mo is portrayed by newcomer Markees Christmas, and whether through inexperience or design, he plays the confused young man as an introvert, tentatively taking in his new surroundings, with little knowledge of the language or customs of his scenic new town. The real eye-opener, however, is Craig Robinson. Part of the large ensemble on NBC's The Office from 2005 to 2013, the gifted comedian has gone on to establish himself as an indispensable supporting player in films like Pineapple Express, Hot Tub Time Machine and This Is the End. Given the chance to stretch his legs in a dramatic role, he's this sweet little movie's biggest surprise. His turn as Mo's dad is a showcase for Robinson's heretofore hidden talents as an actor of great emotional depth.

It hasn't been easy for either Curtis or Mo, who are attempting to rebuild from the recent loss of their beloved wife and mother. It's clear how much she still hovers over their lives, though Hartigan provides little information on what took her from them. But this is a father/son story, and on this note, former professional soccer player Curtis more than earns a mug as World's Greatest Dad, doing his best to provide for his son, even while he privately mourns as the duo adjust to life as extremely conspicuous expats in lily-white Heidelberg.

Curtis has brought them here after accepting a job on the coaching staff of a losing German team; recognizing that his schedule will keep him away from the fragile Mo for long stretches, Curtis hires local Swiss grad student Inka (Carla Juri) to tutor his son in German. The shy boy gains not only a teacher, but a friend and confidante, a sympathetic surrogate sister who senses his loneliness, pushing him to venture out and make new friends.

And although Mo doesn't necessarily make friends with any of the "German dickheads" who taunt him with casual racism at the summer youth center—calling him "Kobe" as they wonder aloud why this black kid won't join them on the basketball court—youthful longing draws him toward Katrin (Lina Keller, the spitting image of a young Julie Delpy), a popular, slightly older girl. She's way out of Mo's league, so naturally, she begins hanging out with him.

MORRIS FROM AMERICA ★★★

Starring Markees Christmas, Craig Robinson, Carla Juri, Lina Keller, Jakub Gierszal, Levin Henning, Patrick Güldenberg and Eva Löbau. Written and directed by Chad Hartigan. At Coolidge Corner.

Katrin does enjoy spending time with Mo, and his own burgeoning fondness for her leads him to open up and share his passion for freestyle rap. Nevertheless, the undercurrent of racism remains present; when the 15-year-old Katrin brings Mo back to her house, she torments her conservative mother (Eva Löbau) with the notion that this "gangsta" might be her boyfriend, which the woman clearly isn't comfortable with. And when a counselor finds the remnants of a joint on the youth center's grounds, without giving it a second thought, he accuses Mo of being a drug dealer. So, it's no wonder that Mo lashes out during the center's talent show, which ends abruptly when he's thrown out for performing a profane, misogynistic rap.

Nevertheless, Hartigan is a smart-enough filmmaker not to demonize this inherently good kid. Mo is at a mixed-up age, one made more difficult by the death of his mom and the limited time his dad has available to spend with him in this foreign land. We may laugh when Mo dresses a pillow in a sweater Katrin has left behind, pretending it's the girl who infatuates him so, but this awkward, private encounter elicits laughter simply because it rings so true of memories of how we handled our own first romantic longings. Likewise, when Inka alerts Curtis to the rap lyrics that his son has been writing, he's not so much bothered by the profane content of the rhymes as he is by the fact that Mo isn't creating something drawn from his own experience. "What do you actually know about 'fuckin' all the bitches'?" Curtis laments. "And 'two at a time'? You don't know shit."

Curtis, on the other hand, has known real love with Mo's mother, a fact made abundantly clear during a tender monologue that Robinson delivers during a key moment in the film. Curtis relates the story of how he wooed Mo's mother in a way that connects both the past and the present. It's one of the sweetest moments in a film that's filled with them, and it's bound to reduce you to tears, just as it has the young teenager sitting silently beside him. "We gotta stick together," Curtis concludes. They are the only two brothers in Heidelberg, after all. ◆

A WOMAN'S HEART

AN ACCLAIMED INDIE-ROCKER MORPHS FROM MELANCHOLY TO MISCHIEVOUS

"I FEEL SO LONESOME I COULD CRY," ANGEL Olsen sang on the gauzy country-grunge shuffle "Hi-Five" from her second album, Burn Your Fire for No Witness, one of 2014's most haunting albums. Yet with that melancholic allusion to a country icon, the Chicago singer/songwriter found herself pigeonholed. "Suddenly I was this cartoon version of a honky-tonk girl, but I've only played one song that references Hank Williams," she says. "I don't really mind it, but it's just not really how I see my music."

With the pressure of public perceptions magnified by the success of that album, Olsen took stock of how she really saw her own music before making her sublime Sept. 2 follow-up, My Woman. Part of that process involved taking a break from music, followed by more relaxed touring through Turkey, Greece and Portugal, Olsen says. And when she began writing again, she approached some songs on the piano (her first writing tool while growing up in St. Louis) and synthesizer rather than just guitar.

"I realized I have a style, and my style itself is unpredictable," Olsen says from her new home in Asheville, ahead of a tour with her sextet that hits the Sinclair on Sept. 20 and 21.

Granted, the 29-year-old hasn't jumped off the deep end on My Woman, though there's clearly an evolution, particularly from folky roots that included an initial stint as a backup singer with

"Because my writing ... can sort of be pretentious or intellectual in its way, people are afraid of ever letting me be light."

Bonnie "Prince" Billy. If anything pervades, many of the songs echo the sound of '60s girl groups or doo-wop. "I did listen to a lot of doo-wop when I was growing up because my parents grew up during that time," Olsen says, noting her love for the Everly Brothers and Motown records. "You just don't hear that in modern music anymore."

The first half of My Woman casts the starkest shifts for her, from the synth-cradled "Intern" to the retro-pop "Shut Up Kiss Me." Olsen self-directed videos for those songs, in which she lip-syncs in a tinsel wig. And she indulges her passion for roller-skating in the sassy video for "Shut Up Kiss Me," which includes an outtake where she asks the camera person, "Do I need to give more attitude or...?"

"Because my writing on the record—and my writing in general—can sort of be pretentious or intellectual in its way, people are afraid of ever letting me be light," Olsen says. The wig, however, was an afterthought rather than some grand statement, she says, because she lacked the budget for a stylist to keep her hair consistent through the filming. "I was like, 'David Bowie died, and I like Dolly Parton, and why not be a character?' I was just trying to have fun."

The album's second half, on the other hand, gets introspective with longer, lyric-intensive songs. "I'm hardly ever literal," Olsen says, describing those songs as "an open-letter style." Foremost among them—and keeping with the album's theme of gender—are the heartache-infused, spectrally sung "Woman" (where Olsen sings, "I dare you to understand what makes me a woman") and "Sister," which recalls Stevie Nicks' early work with Fleetwood Mac as Olsen mulls the depth of a relationship, of being there for each other.

"I didn't want it to be a romantic love, or not romantic in a typical way, so I named it 'Sister,'" Olsen says. "It's a feminine title, so I went with that. But I think in my head, it could be anyone." And that, she adds, includes the idea that it could be herself.

"I'm talking a lot about love on this record," Olsen says. "I've got people asking me, 'Is it you? Are you the woman [of the album title]?' And yeah, I've always been the writer of my work... Sometimes the way that you're misunderstood is the way that people gain something from your work, so correcting them feels wrong too. For me, if people find meaning in it, great. If they think it's a feminist work, fine. If that's the case, [they] should look at all of my catalog. But for this particular record, I guess for the first time, I feel like I'm putting myself out there." ◆

DOUBLE BIND

I'M FEELING ALMOST FAMOUS, THANKS TO MY TV DOPPELGANGER.

I'M IN A RESTAURANT THE FIRST TIME IT happens. "Hey, Sonic!" says the waiter, a little bit conspiratorially. I smile and say something like, "Yeah, right!" as I do when I have no idea what the hell someone's talking about. Sonic the Hedgehog? Seattle Supersonics? The waiter sidles a bit closer and says, "You look an awful lot like the guy in the Sonic commercials." I tell him that I'm not that guy, but he obviously doesn't believe me. "Right, you're not," he replies—you know, no worries, he's not gonna run to the tabs and tell them to run down here and get a shot of the Sonic guy eating a damn salad.

If you've seen a Sonic Drive-In ad anytime in the past decade or so, then you've seen actors T.J. Jagodowski and Peter Grosz riding through an endless series of drive-thrus, ordering Sonic. Jagodowski, a Holyoke native and the perpetual occupant of the shotgun seat, is the one whose rugged good looks are sowing confusion for the Sonic-loving public. You know how there are websites to help you find your twin? Well, I don't need those. I see mine during every other commercial break.

It's a strange situation, because I know exactly what happens to T.J. Jagodowski when he's walking down the street or buying groceries or hustling to a connecting flight: People are yelling "Sonic Guy!" I hear it from the landscapers working at the house next door. I hear it muttered in surprise by passersby on the sidewalk. I even heard it while driving.

I write about cars, so sometimes I snag the keys to the type of unsubtle machine that prompts onlookers to take a hard look at the lucky dunce behind the wheel. The Ferrari 488 Spider is such a car, especially when painted high-voltage blue and introduced to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, where the rich people consider a non-rusty Volvo 240 to be a little too showy. So I'm pulling out of a parking garage in Portsmouth, top down, feeling like a total mack daddy, when I hear a startled pedestrian exclaim, "The Sonic guy has a Ferrari?"

I'm already driving away, so I can't stop to protest this assumption. And it occurs to me that T.J. Jagodowski is, in a way, at the mercy of my behavior. I went around acting like a big showoff in a Ferrari, and now some guy thinks T.J. Jagodowski is a big showoff in a Ferrari. When I leave a tip for a waiter, he tells his friends whether the Sonic guy is a good tipper. I mean, if I went streaking at Fenway Park, 30,000 people would think that Sonic was up to some really aggressive guerrilla marketing.

Conversely, I gotta hope that T.J. Jagodowski doesn't go on a crime spree. I don't want to spend my days holed up in a shady motel, using the barrel of my pistol to pry the curtains aside for a peek at the parking lot. When you're on the lam like that, eventually someone knocks on the door and you think, "Is this the end of the line?" But then it turns out it's your old lady coming back with a pack of cigarettes. That's no life for me. I don't smoke, and I'm not about to start just because I resemble an amazingly handsome burger spokesman.

To add another layer of confusion, I've been on TV and my photo runs in magazines, so I sometimes got recognized before the Sonic thing took off. But that happened infrequently enough that I was always flattered to talk to anyone who actually knew who I was. Now I know what it's like to ascend to a higher, and much more annoying, level of fame. Now that I have lived under the searing glare of the Sonic heat lamp, I feel a certain kinship with my fellow celebrities. Here we are, trying to live our lives, and all we ever hear is "Hey Beyoncé!" or "Hey Leonardo!" or "Hey Sonic Guy!" I think I speak for all of us when I ask you to please respect our privacy, or the privacy of the people you think we are even though we're actually six years younger and have maybe a little more hair.

Now that I have lived under the searing glare of the Sonic heat lamp, I feel a certain kinship with my fellow celebrities. Here we are, trying to live our lives, and all we ever hear is "Hey Beyoncé!" or "Hey Leonardo!" or "Hey Sonic Guy!"

Sonic began this ad campaign in 2004, canceled it in 2010 and then brought it back a few years ago. Now the Sonic guys are more beloved and ubiquitous than ever, meaning that I'm consigned to a life of mistaken identity unless I gain 50 pounds or T.J. Jagodowski gets hooked on meth or otherwise finds a way to stop being so handsome. So here's what I'm hoping for: that Jagodowski, by all accounts an excellent improv actor, gets big, so big that people yell "T.J.!" instead of "Sonic Guy!"—too big for cheeseburger commercials. And then? I've got shotgun. ◆

SOUND ADVICE ON BOOZING BUDS, ROWDY KIDS AND PAYING DOWN DEBT.

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I don't drink. It's not that I can't or have had a problem with alcohol, but I just don't drink. I never have; I just don't like it. My issue is, everywhere I go, people push it on me, and when I decline their offers, they make assumptions about me. No, I am not an alcoholic. No, it's not because of religion. Not only that, but whenever we go out as a group and split the bill, I am the one who drank Coke all night, but they've been downing $18 martinis. I don't want to seem petty, but after a while the bar tab is way more than I want to pay. Help! Well, this is a two-pronged question. Of course it's fine not to be a drinker, and it sounds like you're definitely not acting "holier than thou" about your preferences. Most people are uncomfortable when friends act differently than they do. It holds a mirror up to them; maybe they should clean up their booze habits a little, and your abstaining bothers them a bit. Human nature.

As far as the bar tab is concerned, one of my pet peeves has always been people who, when they're out to dinner with friends, will say, "Well, I had the chicken and you had the steak, so my tab is $6 less than yours..." This kind of nitpicking is annoying, cheap and a reflection of people who will probably never "get it" in a social sense. These situations have a way of evening out eventually, and you can order a special dessert or a side that no one else chooses. Call it the cost of keeping friends, a cheap cost in the long run.

No matter how many friends gather, split the check evenly. There are too many hassles in life. Make it easy. It's a no-brainer.

I'm on the board of a summer community on the Cape. Turnover in ownership is pretty rapid; people come in, people go out. Sometimes it seems out of control. There's lots of action on the beach at night among the younger generation, high school and some college kids, too. They drink beer, smoke dope and make noise. If we call the cops, the kids mouth off, and the parents circle the wagons and defend the kids. How do we keep things from getting out of control? Welcome to the wonderful world of parents wanting to be buddies, not parents. I hear this story in many forms, particularly from California and the Northeast. Civility seems to be disappearing in society, and the entitlement gene is one of the downsides of achieving the American Dream.

Do you know the "broken windows theory" in big cities? Basically, the idea is that when youth spray graffiti all over buildings and smash windows in rundown areas, the destruction feeds on itself, and with no order or discipline, society can fall apart. Bill Bratton, the Boston-born New York City police commissioner, believed that if you repaired windows and wiped out graffiti and prosecuted small crimes, order would be better preserved and overall crime would diminish. And crime rates did decline dramatically during his tenure.

In my view, the same holds true wherever you live and work. It's time for parents to be adults, setting limits with penalties for bad behavior. Not everyone loves us; not everyone buys our acts. Young adults living at home or just back from school for vacation are going to be contemptuous of you anyway. It's OK to be the bad guys and let them know you're in charge.

I've been anti-authority all of my life—in school, in the military, in a lot of my writing. But I've learned to pay attention to history and the decline and fall of institutions and countries that let discipline and order fade away. Be brave enough to be an adult.

I have a good and steady job. But I also have a mortgage and a car loan and credit card debt. Which should I focus on paying off first? The mortgage interest rate is pretty low, as is the car loan. The credit card is at 17 percent, but the balance is only $2,000. So my question is: Which one should I throw extra payments to? Or should I try to send a little extra money every month to each? Or should I send a little extra to the mortgage and car loan when

It holds a mirror up to them; maybe they should clean up their booze habits a little.

I can? I know the interest on the mortgage is deductible, so maybe I should let that be and just pay my monthly mortgage with no extra? Or should I just make the monthly payments and send the extra cash to a savings account? Well, this is a typical American problem these days. If you had a student loan too, you'd hit the quadfecta. Debt can be a killer of course, and it's no joke; "paycheck to paycheck" is something I hear from too many people in our society.

In your case, it seems you have a good job. So focus: Interest rates are nearly the lowest in our history, and in my opinion, they will stay low for an extended period. So do not put money against your mortgage. Concentrate on paying down credit card debt first. And if you can eventually pay off credit cards each month, do it. The rates are obscene in our current environment.

I would put two-thirds of your monthly surplus toward the card side. The remaining one-third I would use to build up your net worth, which means investing in one stock that you believe will survive and grow in the future. Have an element in your financial life that can increase your net worth over time. You can better afford to service debt if you increase the value of your investments. Pick a company that you actually know, because you use their products or services. Even if you buy it in small amounts over the long term, you'll be glad you did it.

Be creative, not conventional about money matters. ◆

GOING STRONG

THE PATRIOTS' LINEBACKER TACKLES HIS FLYING FEARS, TRACK & FIELD BONA FIDES AND LIFE AFTER FOOTBALL

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS LINEBACKER JAMIE COLLINS, 26, was born and raised in Mississippi, where he played football and was a standout in track and field during high school. He went to the University of Southern Mississippi and was the Patriots' first draft pick in 2013. His breakout game came in 2014 against the Indianapolis Colts, where he had six tackles, one sack and an interception. Since then, he has continued to distinguish himself as a versatile linebacker, known for both his athleticism and discipline.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Best thing about being an NFL star?
JAMIE COLLINS: There's a lot. Going different places, meeting new people, seeing things I've never seen. All that stuff.

Worst? Flying. Airplanes. The travel part gets old, and I don't like to fly. I don't like being up there. I don't like doing anything that's not in my control. I want to be in control all the time. I'm like, "Let me fly the plane."

Do you miss track and field at all? I do. It's fun. I always enjoyed it, but I wouldn't be where I am if I'd stuck with it.

Was it good preparation for football? You can take a lot of tools from it and apply it to football. That's true of any sport—the skills you use for one can be taken to any other.

When you leapt over the Colts' defensive line, was that something that somebody who never did track and field would think of? [Laughs.] Anybody could have done that. It's common sense: You want to jump over that.

But you might not know how to if you hadn't done track and field. You may be right, but at the same time, I think plenty of people would have done the same thing.

Was it planned or spur of the moment? I'd thought about it many times, and we talked about it. It was planned.

If I'd told you when you were a kid that you'd be a famous football player, what would you have said? It would have gone right over my head. I wouldn't have listened, and I would have gone right back to doing whatever I was doing.

Are you the fastest person you know? Oh, no. Definitely not. I have older brothers—I'm the youngest—and cousins, and you're talking about fast? My folks? All we did was race each other. I've got a lot of fast people, and they're a lot faster than me back at home. I'm OK.

Biggest pig in the Patriots' locker room? Oh! It's gotta be one of the big guys. I can't name names, but those guys are probably the messiest.

Player you hang out with the most off the field? AD, Aaron Dobson. He and I hang out a lot, but I like my own time. I hang out alone a lot.

City or team you like playing the most? I like playing everybody. Like I said, I'm from Mississippi. I haven't been a lot of places. I haven't seen a lot of things. So going anywhere is interesting to me. I always enjoy it.

Which would you rather watch: college football or pro? Neither. I didn't grow up watching football, and I still don't. Me and Chandler Jones have talked about this since I first got up here. I never watched football. I never thought I'd be here, and I'd rather play video games. I don't really want to watch it.

So what do you turn on when you flop down on the couch? I'll probably find a movie to watch. Maybe a late-night talk show. Or CSI. I'll put that on, Miami or New York.

Patriot who's most likely to appear on Dancing With the Stars? I'll have to go with my man Gronk. Ain't nobody like Gronk. He's got some moves. The Beast.

Is Bill Belichick a big ol' teddy bear? That's not the way I'd describe him. No. [Laughs.]

Three words to describe Bob Kraft? Boss. Cool. And 100.

Who's better looking—Tom Brady or Julian Edelman? [Laughs.] Oooh. They're both prettier than a mug. That's some Mississippi slang. You can just draw straws. Pick one.

How often do you wear your Super Bowl ring? Never. When I first got it, I wore it a lot. I never wear it anymore. I've got it in a big ol' safe. It kind of slips my mind.

Biggest indulgence once you hit the big time? The first thing I bought, and the only thing I bought, was a house for my sister in Mississippi.

"I never watched football. I never thought I'd be here, and I'd rather play video games. I don't really want to watch it."

Do you ever eat the food the fans eat at Gillette, and if so, what's your favorite snack? No, I've never eaten that stuff.

Any superstitions before you go out on the field? I don't know that I'd call them superstitions, but I definitely follow a routine. Mostly, I try to go in there and do what I gotta do. I try to de-stress and focus, be in my head. I'm not too superstitious.

Do you have trouble finding clothes in a normal store? Yeah. Outside of a big-and-tall men's store, I can't find my shoe size. They don't carry size 15. I do some custom stuff, too.

What does life after football look like to you? I live day by day, and I try to live every day to the fullest, because you never know what happens tomorrow. So I plan for some things, but at the end of the day, I try to focus on the simple things and right now. But if I picture the ideal, I'm somewhere in the country, just chillin'.

Pet peeve with the fans? [Laughs.] This is the only thing I don't like. You know how a lot of people say, "Those athletes are rude"? We're not the rude ones. What's rude is when they come up, no matter who you're with or what you're doing, and they don't even say hello. They just say, "Sign this. Sign that." Not even a "How you doing?" That's the only thing I don't like.

So you don't like signing autographs? Oh, I don't mind doing whatever, if it's the right place and time. It's just that a lot of the time, it isn't.

Is there a place you like to hang out in Boston? Like I said, I'm not really a city guy. I go to Del Frisco's every once in a while.

Predictions for this season? Oh, I don't know. You gotta take it day by day, and whatever's going to happen will happen. ◆

THANK YOU, Roger Goodell! The world's most overpaid gym teacher successfully sent Tom Brady to detention, where he'll spend four games thinking about how naughty it is to violate the Ideal Gas Law, which is apparently what he did. Oh yes, we're still talking about Deflategate, still marveling at how a passel of inconsequentially squishy footballs that were used two years ago—for one half of a game—will have a very real impact on the 2016 season. The face-value assessment is that losing Brady for four games hurts the Patriots. And that's just what Bill Belichick wants you to think. Go ahead and gloat, fools. A four-game suspension won't stop us. In fact, that's exactly what we wanted.

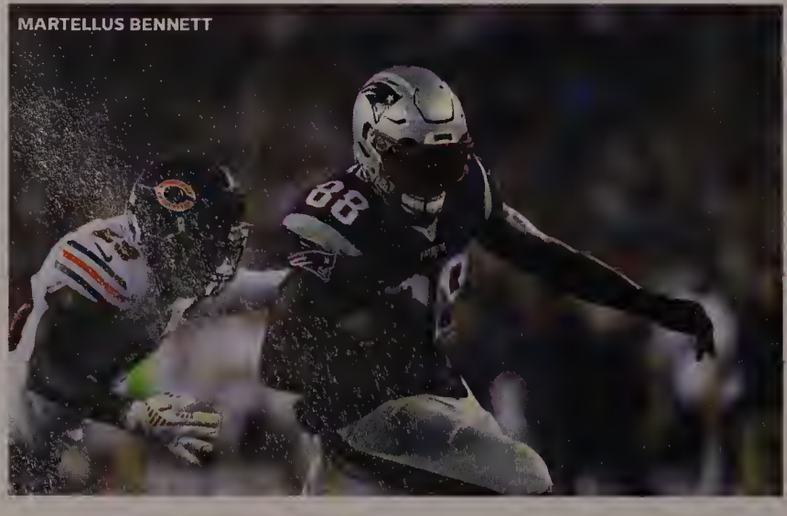
Early in the season, the offense is still gelling. There might be bungled plays, missed blocks, vicious blindside sacks. Remember Mr. Bernard Pollard? Of course you do. He took out Brady's knee in the first game of the 2008 season, which came to be known as the Matt Cassel Year. Brady wishes he'd been suspended for the first four games of that year. Bad things happen early, even during the preseason. Better to stab yourself with some scissors and bide your time than to end up like Tony Romo, with a vertebra sacrificed on the altar of a meaningless August tuneup.

In an alternate narrative, Tom Brady appeals to the Supreme Court, which rules 8-0 that Roger Goodell is as dumb as a manatee and should have a career standing on the sidewalk to advertise mattress sales. Brady then gets to play, and J.J. Watt marks his return in Week 3 by Pollarding Brady's other knee. Then we would all wish he'd just rolled with this whole Deflategate thing and stepped into the season four games fresher than everyone else.

For the Patriots, a Brady-less September ought not to be a disaster. If Jimmy Garoppolo can go 2-2 during the first four games, well, that would be just what Brady himself did two years ago. They're not going to go 0-4—the Cassel Patriots, our best and thankfully only frame of reference, notched 11 wins and should've made the playoffs. In fact, there's an outside chance that the Pats start 4-0 and we all get subjected to a barrage of asinine stories speculating whether New England has a quarterback controversy. Let us answer that now: No, it doesn't. Jimmy Garoppolo could somehow win five games in the first four weeks, and he'd still be standing on the sidelines come Oct. 9. He's a solid quarterback, but right now he's keeping a seat warm. That's it. Brady will not be usurped. Not even if Garoppolo starts calling himself "Jim," which would sound much more like an NFL quarterback and much less like someone who just earned his merit badge for basketry.

The Brady suspension is a topic to bitch about, but also something that ultimately shouldn't make much of a difference, assuming No. 12 doesn't spend his downtime jumping off cliffs in Costa Rica or touching anything sharper than Gisele's cheekbones. No, the real make-or-break positions with this team lie elsewhere. Let's take a look, starting with the defense.

JIMMY GAROPPOLO



DANTE SCARNECCHIA

JAMES WHITE

ROB GRONKOWSKI

MARTELLUS BENNETT

LEGARRETTE BLOUNT

THE D IS STACKED

Fourth-year linebacker Jamie Collins is already a Pro Bowl-caliber leader on defense—last year he tied the NFL lead with five forced fumbles (along with 5.5 sacks and 89 tackles) despite missing four games due to illness. He's one of those linebackers who seems to be everywhere on the field at once, a problem for both quarterbacks and their receiving corps.

Which, with the Pats' defense, is sort of the idea—most of the guys out there can rotate into different positions, throwing an ever-bubbling cauldron of confusion at opposing offensive coordinators. Consider the recently acquired and excellently named Barkevious Mingo. At 6 feet, 4 inches tall and 240 pounds, Mingo can rush the quarterback or drop into pass coverage. Whether he's really good remains to be seen (the Browns seem to think not, but they've been known to be wrong), but either way Mingo brings the element of surprise. Like the children's song says, "There was a coach who acquired a hybrid defender, and Mingo was his name-o."

There have been years when you just knew that the Pats' defense couldn't stop the run or was going to get consistently burned on deep routes. This crew, though, looks solid all the way through. You've got second-round draft pick Cyrus Jones playing cornerback and returning punts, never-paying-for-a-drink-in-Boston-ever-again Pro Bowler Malcolm Butler and second-year defensive end Trey Flowers shaping up to be a monster. (He was out most of last season but racked up the sacks in the preseason.) We've got Patrick Chung and Devin McCourty, Dont'a Hightower, Jabaal Sheard and Logan Ryan. Defense isn't as sexy as a high-octane offense, but your path to victory gets a lot easier when you don't need to score 42 points per game.

One other thing: Part of the defensive story always revolves around disappointment over a player who's no longer on the team, also known as Lawyer Milloy Syndrome. So let's just take a moment and be thankful that we dodged a bullet with Aqib Talib, who proved himself not so great at dodging bullets when he got shot in the leg at a strip club this summer. Yeah, he's a good player, but obviously the Pats saw a little bit of Plaxico Burress in his crazy eyes and made the right decision when they let him go to Denver two years ago.

NOW, ABOUT THAT OFFENSE...

The offensive line is once again riddled with injuries. Shaq Mason and Sebastian Vollmer are hurt. Bryan Stork was alternately hurt or acting full-on cray, leading to him being replaced—again—by David Andrews, who started the first 10 games last year while Stork was injured. That should've clued in Mr. Stork that perhaps he shouldn't throw punches in a preseason practice, of all things. Storks deliver babies, and Belichicks deliver Storks who act like babies to the Redskins, who...uh, return them if they fail their physical.

So that's what's up at center! At left guard, rookie Joe Thuney was a surprise standout in the preseason. Thuney is either wicked smart or wicked motivated, having earned a four-year degree from N.C. State in three years. Star left tackle Nate Solder is back after missing most of last season with a torn biceps. But maybe the biggest improvement for the offensive line comes from the sidelines, where longtime Patriots offensive line coach Dante Scarnecchia is back. He retired in 2013, but after last year's festival of O-line mediocrity (which, admittedly, was exacerbated by a ton of injuries), Belichick called and asked the 68-year-old to return. Which he did, because that's what you do when Belichick calls and tells you to un-retire.

Now, assuming that the offense line can protect GaroppoBrady long enough to make something happen, there are plenty of weapons. LeGarrette Blount or James White should be able to rack up enough running yards to keep opposing defenses honest while keeping the field open for the receiving corps, which includes Julian Edelman back from foot surgery. And this looks like a year when the passing game will revolve around the tight ends—in this case, both of them.

In GQ's recent "Gronk Up Your Life" story, we learned that Rob Gronkowski often tries to get to Level 6 dancing when he's out clubbing, but doesn't always get there because you can't plan on it. But you can plan on Gronk and Martellus Bennett—6 feet, 6 inches tall, 275 pounds—being the most unstoppable tight end tandem in the league. Two years ago, Bennett posted six touchdowns and 916 yards for a mediocre Bears team. Meanwhile, Aaron Hernandez's best year? Seven TDs and 910 yards. From the look of those numbers, Bennett has the potential to be even more dangerous than Hernandez. On the field, we mean. Bennett also used much of a preseason press conference to explain why Batman is so much better than Aquaman. This sounds like a guy who's going to have a lot to talk about with Gronk. Now if only Gronk can avoid the Madden Cur—uh, never mind. Nothing to worry about. Video game curses don't exist. Please, let that be true.

SUNDAY, OCT. 9: THE RETURN OF BRADY. THEN WHAT?

Week 5 marks the return of Tom Brady. He'll be fresh, invigorated and full of wrath and vengeance. By then, his attitude is gonna make Scowling Rio Phelps look like Richard Simmons leading a senior aerobics class. Moreover, he'll be playing the Browns. Let's go ahead and mark this one down as a win. From there, it's not exactly gravy: The 2016 Patriots strength-of-schedule rating ranks ninth in the NFL, featuring plenty of teams that were better than .500 last year. And then you've got the late-season Miami game, which somehow always spells trouble even during the years when the Dolphins play football as well as actual dolphins.

So there's a tough schedule, a backup quarterback for a quarter of the regular season and an offense with a questionable O-line. Naturally, then, the Patriots are favored to win the Super Bowl, with Vegas putting the odds at 7 to 1, just ahead of the Green Bay Packers, the Seattle Seahawks and the Pittsburgh Steelers. Hey, in the current NFL, every team has defects, and the oddsmakers recognize that the Patriots have a habit of overcoming weaknesses and developing castoffs and untouchables into household names by January. The Pats made it to the Super Bowl six times in the past 14 years, and every year except the 2007 regular season there was some obvious flaw to overcome (and that year, a not-so-obvious one: hubris).

You all know someone, possibly yourself, who cringes at a sequence of three-and-outs halfway through an October game and declares the Patriots' season done. New England sports fans are reactionary, somehow still nurturing a strong pessimist streak despite all these years of success. So just remember that it's going to look ugly out there sometimes. Brady will get sacked, and the camera will cut to him ripping into a bashful galoot of a lineman on the sidelines. They'll get past it. As long as the clock's running, there's still a way to win. The Brady-Belichick Era might be deep in the second half, but time is still on their side.

TEAM PLAYERS

There are 46 players in a Patriots uniform for any given game, but behind the scenes there are nearly 5,000 workers at Gillette Stadium making sure everything goes smoothly for the more than 66,000 fans filling the stands. We talked to a half-dozen of those workers to get a peek into their gameday routines.

KAREN LINK

Cheerleader

Gamedays sometimes seem easier than Karen Link's hectic weekday schedule, which has her rushing from an early-morning workout to her fulltime PR job for a Boston tech firm and then to cheerleading practice at Gillette Stadium. Add in a team trainer and a nutritionist to give her year-round guidance and recommendations, and Link says she's "set up for success" when she heads out to the field. The cheerleader, who started dancing at age 2 and overcame a broken spine in high school, passed a series of auditions and endured a two-week bootcamp to make the team in 2014. Now, she's hooked on the sisterhood with her fellow cheerleaders: "I've formed some of the closest friendships I've ever had. We all keep in touch, some of us are roommates, and we attend each other's birthdays, weddings and baby showers. It really is something special."

5 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Attend a full squad meeting at the stadium's cheerleader building to discuss the day's events.

4.5 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Gameday practice begins. We do a long group stretch, run every end zone dance scheduled for the game and run every sideline dance or cheer that we have prepared for the game (usually at least 50). We also rehearse any obligations we have for special events planned for the game, such as holding field-sized flags for the Salute to Service game or forming a breast cancer awareness ribbon on the field with survivors.

2 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: After gameday practice concludes, we normally have an hour or so to have some down time. This is when we eat, do our hair and makeup, get in any final individual practice time and get dressed for the game.

1 HOUR TILL KICKOFF: After we are dressed and ready to go, we do a final group stretch, have our traditional Unity Circle—a pep talk with our director before the start of the game—and then hop on the golf carts and ride over to the stadium

30 MINUTES TILL KICKOFF: We head onto the field, take our position on the sidelines and await our introduction.

15 MINUTES TILL KICKOFF: We dance our pregame routine, and then we form the player tunnel. The teams are then announced, the national anthem is performed, and then it's finally show time

GAMETIME: We perform four end zone dances during various breaks in the action. We also do shorter combinations that we perform between plays or during timeouts.

MICHAEL JUROVATY
Assistant director of media relations

The path to his dream job wasn't straightforward for Michael Jurovaty. After completing grad school and a couple of college internships, he was working as a real-estate broker in 2009 when he got a response to an inquiry to the Patriots. He scored an internship and eventually a fulltime media relations gig. Enjoying his job makes working long hours in sometimes-frigid temps easier (as does the spandex cold-weather compression gear he's been known to wear under his suit). "They were my favorite team growing up, so I love knowing that every day when I get up in the morning, I get to head to work at Gillette Stadium," he says. "I count my blessings knowing how many New Englanders would love to have this job."

5 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Arrive at the stadium and finish last-minute preparations for the game. Make sure my binder is organized with reference material, including game releases for teams, a pregame time script, flip cards and checklists.

4 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Open the press box to media. Check in with pregame show TV crews on the field. For home games, I always meet WBZ-TV's Dan Roche by the souvenir shop to deliver a flip card. It's a tradition we've had since I started with the Pats.

2 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Attend the pregame meeting with stadium security team and network TV staff.

1 HOUR TILL KICKOFF: Head to the field and assist with any last-minute pregame media needs from the TV network, sideline photographers and other on-field media. I am in direct contact with the PR staff in the press box and am responsible for relaying any injury information to the media during the game.

HALFTIME: Assist the TV network in coordinating a halftime interview with head coach Bill Belichick.

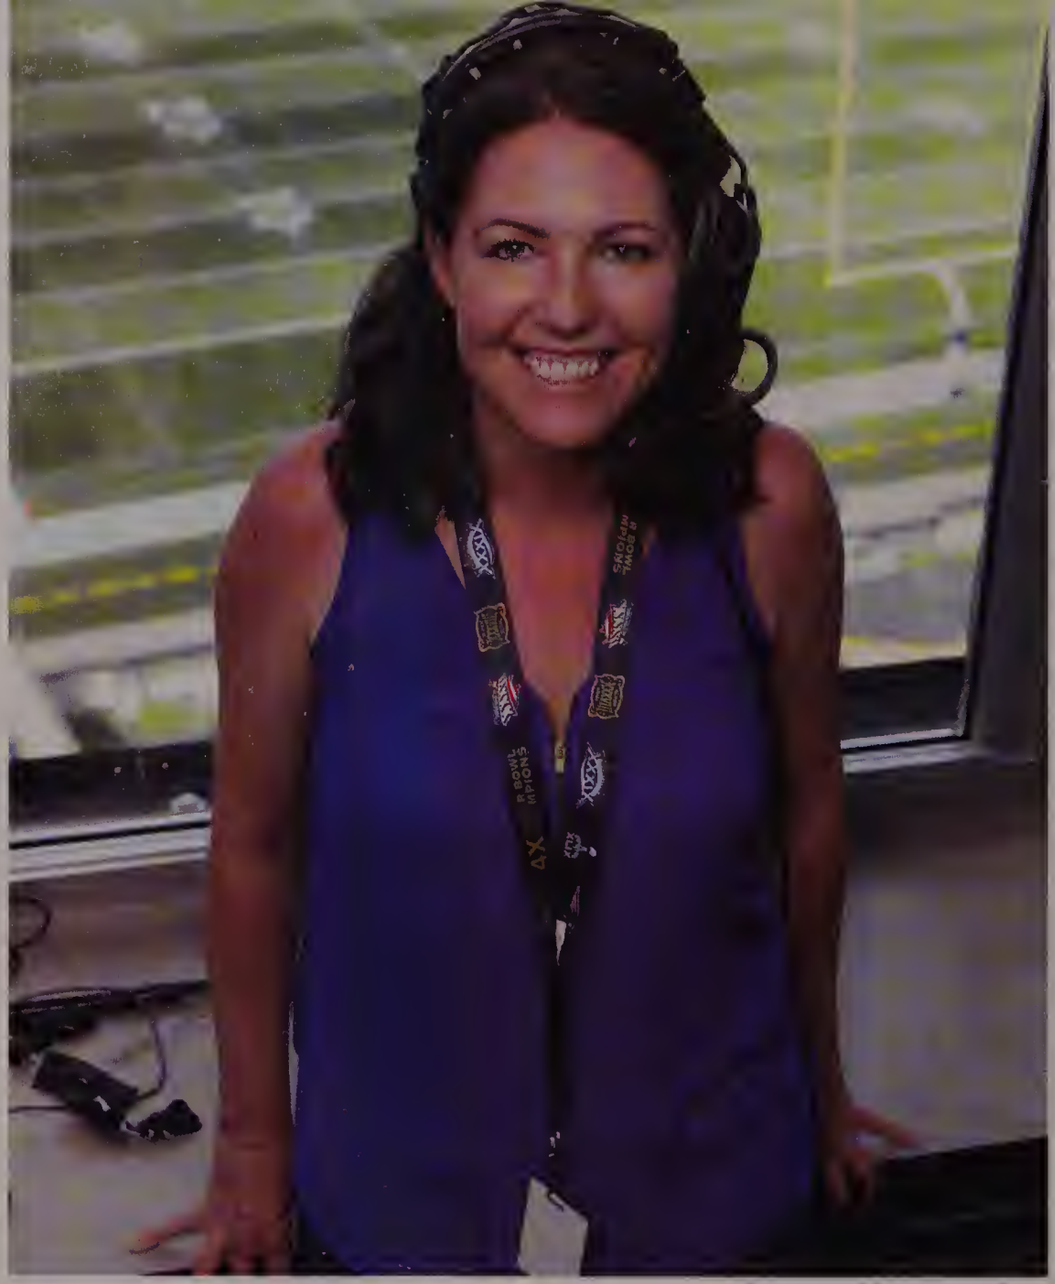
POSTGAME: Coordinate on-field postgame interviews with the TV and radio broadcast teams, then head to the locker room to assist with media availability and additional TV and radio interview requests. After the locker room is closed to the media, I return to the press box to proofread and distribute transcripts.

JULIE GRIFFIN
Luxury suite manager

After getting a tip from a friend, Julie Griffin applied to a job opening at Gillette Stadium in 2002. She didn't get that job, but a couple days later she got called back for a position on the stadium's suite level. Nearly a decade and a half later, she's managing 89 suites, a task that requires three pairs of shoes: pregame sneakers, gametime heels and postgame slippers. Despite walking almost a marathon's worth of miles each gameday, she relishes the fast pace and the challenge of making every guest's visit memorable, whether it's with a scoreboard message, a celebratory cake or an on-field visit. "It's like having company to your home," Griffin says. "You want your guests to have a great time and look forward to returning."

7 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Check for last-minute menu changes, deliver packages to suites and walk through the suites, making sure everything is in place.

5.5 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Meet with suite supervisors and other staff to discuss any special instructions. Walk through each suite to check if suite attendants need assistance.



3 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Suites open, and I replace my sneakers with heels! As guests arrive, I visit suites and greet suite holders and their guests, noting any unexpected VIPs.

1.5 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: If I know in advance there's a special guest attending the game, I can sometimes arrange for a field visit, so the guest can watch the team warm up, take some pictures and soak up the gameday environment.

KICKOFF: It's now a full house. I try to stop by the suites once again to say hello and ensure everything is running smoothly.

MIDWAY THOUGH 2ND QUARTER: Prepare for halftime field visits. I usually try to pick up the group with a few minutes left in the second quarter so they get to see some of the game on the field level. You're not going to get closer to the action!

POSTGAME: I've typically logged 20-25 miles. It's time to put slippers on and drive home!

ABIGAIL THELIN

Director of event presentation

The only person calling more audibles than Tom Brady on gameday might be Abigail Thelin. The director of event presentation at Gillette since 2013, Thelin is in charge of a crew of 43—including eight camera operators, seven replay operators and several graphics and ribbon board operators—working out of a TV production truck. She follows a production script that even has the coin toss scheduled to the second, but sticking to it is always tough—especially, for example, if Bon Jovi's in the house and they've got to play "Livin' on a Prayer." "Five minutes into the game once we get a feel for how it is going, I can pretty much tear it up because everything has changed."

7 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Arrive at the stadium an hour before the crew call so I can finalize the scripts.

5.5 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Run through the script in a crew meeting and point out anything new. As the crew begins to load content and test systems, I troubleshoot issues as they arise. This is also when we enjoy a crew meal—I'm a sucker for the mac 'n' cheese. Seriously, it's so addictive!

2.5 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: National anthem sound check. My inner 10-year-old was ecstatic when Joey McIntyre from New Kids on the Block sang the anthem for us a few years ago. Other than the banner-raising ceremony, that might have been my favorite day of work!

2 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Gates open. We have to make sure all our ribbon boards are fired up and our DJ is playing music.

1 HOUR TILL KICKOFF: Players start to trickle onto the field for warmups, and we begin live production, showing the players and fans on the videoboards. The hourlong warmup is sponsored, so we have to make sure we show live footage for at least 30 minutes.

20 MINUTES TILL KICKOFF: Pregame presentation begins. Everything from this point on is scripted down to the second. We have to abide by timing given us by the broadcast so that we line certain things up with their commercial breaks.

KICKOFF: Execute everything in the script, making sure that we run all our sponsor elements as well as entertain and excite the fans.

BRET HARTLEY

Director of concessions

Think it's tricky figuring out what to serve your handful of friends when they come over to watch the game? Try serving more than 66,000. That's Bret Hartley's job as director of concessions at Gillette Stadium. This season, he's also overseeing the addition of some new concession items, such as buffalo mac 'n' cheese, steak 'n' cheese French fries and a shredded short rib sandwich. Hartley got used to serving 42,000 fans as the concessions manager for the San Diego Padres, but he couldn't turn down the chance to serve 20,000 more and move back home to New England in 2010. "The most challenging part ... is anticipating their consumption," Hartley says. "It is a team effort."

10 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Arrive at the stadium and check staffing sheets, making any adjustments. From there, it's running through a list of duties. Make sure there's enough product in the commissary, walk through the concession stands, review plans for the day and meet with concessions and club supervisors before their shifts.

2 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Gates open, and I make sure all the stands have their shutters up and are ready for business. I troubleshoot any problems that arise and make sure that all products are available.

END OF THIRD QUARTER: Make sure beer concessions are shut down. And then—finally!—eat dinner.

POSTGAME: Close concessions stands and reconcile sales.

TIM SULLIVAN
Senior operations manager

Like everyone else who heads to Gillette Stadium for a Patriots game, Tim Sullivan is praying for 70 degrees and sunny. But it's not just personal comfort that's behind his weather wish. He manages more than 300 acres of parking lots outside Gillette, so icy roads or heavy rain can make coordinating parking for thousands of cars even more difficult. Sullivan is at the stadium rain or shine at 7 am on gamedays—and 5 am for a 1 pm game—and while he sometimes hops in a helicopter to better monitor the parking operation, it's when he's on the ground with the fans that he feels like he's really in the action: "Many of them have the same routine every game and park in the same location, so you get to know them and talk with them every game."

8 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Brief supervisors on the day's activities and review the VIP guest list.

6 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Check in flaggers and cashiers.

5.5 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Respond to employee no-shows, redeploying cashiers and supervisors to spots that need coverage.

5 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: Make sure all lots are set to be opened, staff is in place, credit card machines are working properly and everything is ready to go.

4 HOURS TILL KICKOFF: All parking lots are now open. During the next 4 hours, I drive around on my golf cart, responding to any issues that may arise, monitoring the lot capacities and working with state police to make sure all vehicles in the queue can park.

KICKOFF: The goal is to have all cars parked prior to kickoff. We wait for all the tailgaters to make their way into the stadium before we take a break and watch the game.

START OF 4TH QUARTER Get the staff ready to direct cars to the exit.

POSTGAME: Make sure lots are exiting properly so everyone can get home safe.

2 HOURS AFTER THE GAME Catch up with supervisors; get their feedback on the staff and any occurrences at the game.

PERFORMING ARTS

ON BLAST Off the Grid Theatre Company is known for its provocative, outside-the-box productions. It staged spring's Equus in an unassuming South End storefront, receiving rave reviews with its take on the disturbing drama about a psychiatrist and a teenage patient who has a psychosexual obsession with horses. But the tiny fringe company has pushed itself further for its 10th production, a staging of late playwright Sarah Kane's Blasted, which received equal parts praise and condemnation when it debuted in London. The controversial drama follows a misogynistic journalist, his much younger female companion and a war-damaged soldier during the course of five scenes set in and around a hotel room, where the three inflict unspeakable acts of emotional, physical and sexual violence upon one another. Not intended for audiences under the age of 17 (or the faint of heart), the play runs through Sept. 18 at the BCA. / Alexandra Cavallo

DIRECTOR'S CUT With more than 40 documentary credits to her name, including Darfur Now and the Oscar-winning Citizenfour, cinematographer Kirsten Johnson has seen it all through her lens. But the entire story of a documentary is rarely captured on camera, with the filmmaking process itself being the most notable omission. In her latest project, the visual memoir Cameraperson, Johnson reframes old footage from her time filming conflict zones and childbirths to help explain how covering a story personally affects its storyteller. Get ready for her close-up when Johnson attends a screening at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on Sept. 18. / Andrew Elmers PHOTO: LYNSEY ADDARIO / NEW FRONTIER FILMS

DON'T BREATHE ★★★ Known for the buckets of gore he unleashed in his Evil Dead remake in 2013, director Fede Alvarez has set his latest horror film in another enclosed space, but he's shifted his focus into suspense territory—and the results are thrilling. "Just because he's blind doesn't mean he's a fucking saint, bro," says burglar Money (It Follows' Daniel Zovatto) to his teenaged accomplice Alex (Goosebumps' Dylan Minnette), who's reluctantly entered a life of crime because of his puppy-dog devotion to Money's girlfriend and fellow accomplice, Rocky (Evil Dead's Jane Levy), a single mom who's trying to find a way out of Detroit. Money has discovered that their sightless old mark (Avatar's Stephen Lang) is sitting on a pile of cash in his expansive home on an empty street, but what he doesn't know is that their intended victim is a military vet who's more than capable of violently turning the tables on the would-be thieves, vision or no. And lest you think this is just a recipe for some mindless fun, the setup also serves as a sly commentary on how the economically depressed can turn on each other to survive a system that's rigged against them. Expertly crafted, if occasionally over the top, this is one of the best home-invasion thrillers since 1967's Wait Until Dark. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

HELL OR HIGH WATER ★★★1/2 Director David Mackenzie's crime drama may be set in modern-day Texas, but it's a classic Western through and through, full of moral grays and another towering performance by the gray-maned Jeff Bridges. He's back in Rooster Cogburn mode as a smarter-than-he-sounds Texas ranger, Marcus Hamilton, a jut-jawed good ol' boy who's equally at home chasing bank robbers as he is hurling racial slurs at his half-Comanche, half-Mexican partner, who loves the old coot anyway. Speaking of those bank robbers, they're a pair of desperate brothers: Tanner Howard (Ben Foster), a gun-happy career criminal who's recently been released from prison, and his younger, smarter brother, Toby (a revelatory Chris Pine), a divorced dad who's always walked the straight and narrow. But when the Howards face losing the land that's been in their family for generations, Toby works out a rather brilliant plan: They'll only rob the registers at each branch of the bank that's threatening to take everything from them. Stealing just a few thousand from each location keeps their crime spree out of federal jurisdiction, so if Hamilton can't catch them, they may just save the family's land after all, paying for it with money taken from the very company that's about to foreclose. Taylor Sheridan's screenplay also robs rather liberally from Cormac McCarthy's work, and it's even better than his script for last year's Sicario. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

INDIGNATION ★★★1/2 A good deal of Philip Roth's piercing humor seeps into debuting director James Schamus' successful adaptation of the Pulitzer Prize winner's 2008 novel (his 29th), but it's easier to detect in hindsight, since it's the bleakness of the film and the tragedy of its love story that permeates nearly every frame. It's 1951 and Marcus Messner (Logan Lerman), the bright teenaged son of a Jewish butcher in New Jersey, will soon depart for Ohio to receive a liberal arts education on a full scholarship. "How will you keep kosher there?" asks a woman who has no idea that Marcus will soon be dining on escargots opposite a transfixing blond shiksa (Sarah Gadon) as he embraces his new life as a freethinking atheist. A longtime independent film producer and screenwriter known for his collaborations with Oscar-winning director Ang Lee, Schamus has committed to a style that's very generous to his actors, as demonstrated by the film's stunning centerpiece, Marcus' tête-à-tête with his bête noire, Dean Caudwell, played by Pulitzer-winning playwright Tracy Letts in a volatile two-person scene that takes up 16 minutes of screen time. Schamus also hasn't missed the overriding conclusion of Roth's novel, which observes "the terrible, the incomprehensible way one's most banal, incidental, even comical choices achieve the most disproportionate result." (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

JASON BOURNE ★★ Matt Damon returns to the series that made him a star (the less said about 2012's Damon-less The Bourne Legacy, the better), and while this is the fourth time the Boston-bred actor has played man of few words Jason Bourne, it's the first time one of his films has felt so perfunctory. Paul Greengrass, director of the second and third installments, 2004's The Bourne Supremacy and 2007's The Bourne Ultimatum, also returns, but the script he's concocted with co-writer Christopher Rouse (his longtime editor) does little but put the former CIA operative through very familiar paces. Sure, there are a couple of large-scale action sequences that should probably thrill longtime fans of the series spawned from the pages of late author Robert Ludlum's books, but our lethal hero isn't nearly as smart this time out, leaving himself exposed near open windows while handling even less smart devices like a thumb drive with the word "ENCRYPTED" printed in big block letters on its side. This is Jason Bourne for Dummies. Sadly, in the era of Trump, this may be enough. Julia Stiles also returns for the fourth time as Nicky Parsons, setting the convoluted plot in motion as we learn exactly one new detail about Bourne, who lacks his usually reliable identity. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Kubo and the Two Strings ★★★1/2 The narration that opens this latest stop-motion marvel from animation house Laika begins "If you must blink, do it now." That's good advice, since if you close your eyes anytime over the course of the 101 minutes that follow, you'll risk missing some of the exceptional artistry that the Oregon-based studio packs into the corners of every frame. The action in its fourth feature takes place in a mythical Japan as first-time director Travis Knight (a lead animator on Laika's previous trio of Oscar-nominated gems, Coraline, ParaNorman and The Boxtrolls) focuses his camera on young Kubo (voiced by Game of Thrones' Art Parkinson). He's the one-eyed son of Hanzo, a legendary samurai who perished while protecting Kubo and his mom from her father, the Moon King (Ralph Fiennes), a vengeful god who stole his grandson's eye and still seeks the other. Kubo, armed only with his shamisen—a stringed musical instrument that magically allows him to breathe life into a tiny origami warrior—is joined by a talking monkey named Monkey (Charlize Theron) and a former samurai turned man-sized beetle named, yes, Beetle (Matthew McConaughey) as they retrieve pieces of Hanzo's mythical armor for Kubo's inevitable showdown with his grandfather. Blink, and you'll miss one of this year's finest family films. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Morgan ★★ Perhaps you enjoyed Ex Machina, last year's sci-fi thriller about a sentient android given nubile human form? Well, this year's model is a lot less sexy. Here, "Morgan," who's described as an "L-9 prototype," an "organism," an "asset" and, ultimately, a "product," is played by Anya Taylor-Joy (The Witch), made up to look like a hoodie-wearing albino. But Morgan's eyes aren't red; they're black and soulless, not unlike a certain shark that doubled as a "killing machine," terrifying moviegoers back in '75. You'd better believe this detail is purposeful—and just one more borrowed part from other, better films. Not that Morgan doesn't show initial promise, when "risk assessment consultant" Lee Weathers (Kate Mara) arrives at a secluded countryside compound to evaluate an "accident" Morgan was responsible for. But if willfully and repeatedly stabbing a scientist (Jennifer Jason Leigh) in her eye can be termed an accident, then this film may as well be called Alien, the Ridley Scott classic this picture also cribs from. Not surprisingly, Morgan marks the directorial debut of Sir Ridley's son, Luke, who's inherited some of his dad's style. Hopefully, the ideas will come later. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Pete's Dragon ★★★1/2 In a summer that's been notable for its string of money-losing box-office busts, most of them sequels, along comes a late-season entry in that other feared genre: the reimagining of a kiddie-film classic. Mind you, the studio behind Pete's Dragon—a remake-in-name-only—is Disney, which has been increasingly successful in updating old hits from its animation catalog, retooling these time-honored stories to serve a live-action milieu, albeit one enhanced with the latest CGI wizardry. Don Chaffey's 1977 original already took place within a live-action world, but even though the film was fairly awful, child viewers responded to the story of an orphan and his larger-than-life sidekick, the titular hand-drawn dragon. Here, indie writer/director David Lowery and co-writer Toby Halbrooks have wisely dropped the cartoonishness of the earlier film in favor of a heightened realism, removing nearly everything save the names of young Pete (Oakes Fegley) and his dragon, Elliot. This is a very different dragon from the one Don Bluth animated in the original—not just a special effect, but another character. Rarely manipulative and aided by heartfelt performances by Bryce Dallas Howard and Robert Redford, plus a tender musical score by Daniel Hart that occasionally soars under Elliot's spread wings, this isn't only one of the summer's best surprises, but a new Disney classic. Magical. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Southside With You ★★★ What could have descended into a work of hagiography instead ends up a film of small pleasures as first-time director Richard Tanne dramatizes the first date of a couple of young lawyers during a bright summer day in Chicago in 1989. She's Michelle Robinson, and he's a heavy smoker by the name of Barack Obama. OK, so the cigarettes are the closest thing you'll find to a negative in this portrayal of the future president of the United States. And though you may walk away from the theater concerned for the real-life president's extended health outlook, little-known actor Parker Sawyers makes a respectable match for Obama, both physically and with laid-back charm. Sure, Sawyers may lack the toothy smile, but when he delivers an inspiring speech to an adoring public at a community meeting, the man he will become is obvious. This scene is the centerpiece of what Barack keeps referring to as an extended "date," though the future Mrs. Obama (Tika Sumpter from the Ride Along films) will have none of it, reluctantly accompanying her pursuer after he coaxes her into an art exhibit, a showing of Do the Right Thing and, finally, the Baskin-Robbins where Michelle protested right up until the moment she and Barack shared their first kiss. It's a fairly well-known story, and Tanne has crammed a bit too much foreshadowing into his script, but there are worse films to enjoy with your own date. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Suicide Squad ★1/2 I hope you liked that extraneous scene that stopped Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice cold, the one where Wonder Woman pauses in front of her computer to watch fan-service video clips that introduced the Flash, Cyborg and Aquaman, because the first reel of writer/director David Ayer's Suicide Squad—which promised to be DC Comics' big-screen equivalent to The Dirty Dozen—is dedicated to introducing us to "the worst of the worst." Amanda Waller (Viola Davis), the ethics-free, bureaucratic head of a secret government agency, flips through a dossier over dinner; one by one, we see photos of the antiheroes she'll eventually bring together as flashes of their backstories are shown, accompanied by a "hip" collection of licensed songs that's been carefully curated to sell soundtrack tie-ins. Sadly, Waller turns out to be much more intimidating than the supervillains she assembles, from "world's deadliest assassin" Deadshot (played with not-so-deadly snark by Will Smith) to Harley Quinn (Margot Robbie, covered in sex appeal and little else), one-time shrink and current girlfriend of the Joker. Speaking of, if you're coming to this film based on the promise of seeing Jared Leto's tatted, grill-toothed take on the Clown Prince of POWER COUPLE Parker Sawyers and Tika Sumpter play the future president and first lady in Southside with You.

Crime, you're in for a letdown. Barely appearing, he's about as frightening as DC's latest unfocused misfire is entertaining. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

War Dogs ★1/2 Todd Phillips, director of the Hangover trilogy, attempts to make a legitimate film with War Dogs—or at least, he tries to be the next David O. Russell. By this, I mean he's made his own American Hustle, which had Russell in full faux-Scorsese mode. Here, Phillips, his team of writers and editor Jeff Groth have stolen wholesale from 1990's Goodfellas and 2013's The Wolf of Wall Street in adapting Guy Lawson's 2011 Rolling Stone article. Hell, they've even cast The Wolf of Wall Street's Supporting Actor Oscar nominee, Jonah Hill, as one of their two leads. Truth be told, he's the best thing in the movie, delivering lines like "I only sell to one gun nut: the U.S. military," as his morally reprehensible character, Efraim Diveroli, recruits his childhood friend, David Packouz (Miles Teller), to be his partner-in-arms as they luck into a career as high-powered arms dealers. Packouz is positioned as this tale's Henry Hill, narrating the action whenever Phillips stops it with yet another freeze frame—but the former massage therapist never learns his lesson. Phillips and company can't commit to his downfall, instead tacking on a fictional epilogue befitting this entire phony enterprise. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

ILLUMINATED After dominating 2012's airwaves with their folksy love ballad "Ho Hey," going double platinum with their eponymous debut album and scoring a nom for Best New Artist at the 2013 Grammys, the Lumineers effectively went silent. Fans worried that the dearth of news (and nary a new track) from the band in the following years was a sign they'd gotten too big too fast and hit a sophomore slump. They needn't have fretted. It turns out the Lumineers were just very busy writing and recording their stellar follow-up, April's Cleopatra, which finds the Denver trio making good on all that promise with introspective lyricism and string-heavy folk rock. See the light when they hit the Blue Hills Bank Pavilion for two shows on Sept. 7-8. / Alexandra Cavallo

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SEEING DOUBLE The final brushstroke isn't the finishing touch for Farzaneh and Bahareh Safarani, who use video projections to coax canvases to life. "We were sitting in our studio in front of one of our paintings and thinking, 'What if the tablecloth in the painting could move?'" the identical twins recall, collaborating in correspondence as they do in their art. Born and raised in Tehran, the sisters started painting together at age 13 and have worked in concert ever since, earning master's degrees in studio art at Northeastern and the SMFA this spring. Their recent work—like Asleep, shown here—depicts solitary figures in darkened interiors, but they aren't quite alone; other presences soon move through the frame. "Every human being is a reflection of others," the sisters write, nodding to the questions of identity that are central to their work. "[But the central figure] wants to explore herself without being disturbed by other presences. She wants to shape her own personality." Catch their art in action at their exhibition Projecting Her, on view at Adelson Galleries from Sept. 16 through Oct. 30. / Jacqueline Houton

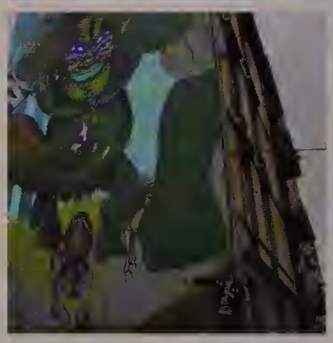
MAKE WAY FOR NORWAY



WHAT I DID ON MY SUMMER VACATION.

Fjords. Glaciers. Waterfalls. Vikings. Reindeer. Leprosy.

What do these things have in common? Norway. The Scandinavian kingdom that brought you the Nobel Prize, pickled herring and Disney's Frozen (don't hold that against them) had long been on my to-go list, and with a direct flight from Boston on Norwegian Airlines, it's an easy 7-hour trip. (Cushy, too, if you spring for Premium.) Upon arrival, we checked into the Oslo Grand Hotel, which is where the Nobel Peace Prize banquet is held, where Henrik Ibsen ate lunch every day and where I experienced my first aquavit hangover.

A short stroll away, past the Royal Palace, is Frogner Park, home of the world's largest sculpture garden by a single artist, Gustav Vigeland, who didn't shy away from eroticism. Facetiously called the "Penis Park of Norway," it's an astonishing artistic achievement that less well-endowed men might find intimidating—with more than 200 sculptures, mostly of nude figures in sometimes eye-popping poses, there's a statue for pretty much every kink. The rest of Oslo is chock-a-block with art, from the National Gallery, where you can see hordes of tourists mimicking Edvard Munch's The Scream, to the Astrup Fearnley Museum of Modern Art, designed by Renzo Piano. The architecturally daring Opera House, meanwhile, gives Sydney a run for its money, while the Viking Ship Museum shows a more amiable side of a people best known for raping and pillaging.

From Oslo, we set out north through country that at first resembled Downeast Maine and then slowly ascended to an alpine plateau: an otherworldly landscape of tundra, pock-marked with lakes and snowdrifts. On the way, we stopped to see the Gardnos meteor crater and a shopping mall that sold seal skins and reindeer hides. Eventually, we reached Vøringfossen, one of the country's most famous waterfalls, where the memorial to people who died there combined with the warning signs showing a stick figure plummeting over the edge were enough to make an acrophobe reach for the Xanax. In Lofthus, we bedded down at the Ullensvang Hotel, where Edvard Grieg composed some of his most famous music, and we enjoyed dinner overlooking the fjord, followed by a few drinks accompanied by a lounge act straight out of Saturday Night Live, Scandinavian Edition.

With cherry farms disappearing up into the clouds on the left and a turquoise fjord to the right, after passing waterfalls that beggar description, we reached Rosendal, where we toured one of Europe's smallest palaces, the Baroniet, and drove up to see Folgefonna, Norway's third largest glacier. The Rosendal Turisthotell, besides epitomizing Nordic chic, made the best fish stew I've ever tasted, and judging by the number of wealthy Europeans driving luxury cars and arriving on expensive yachts, it seems we stumbled upon Norway's version of the Hamptons.

Our next stop was the village of Utne, and one look at the room in the Utne Hotel, where the present king and his parents both honeymooned, tells you everything you need to know about how low-key and unpretentious Norwegians are. A pair of twin beds, with a desk and a dresser, are pretty much it, but what the 18th-century inn lacks in amenities, it more than makes up for in hospitality. There are few towns more twee, and a visit to the Hardanger Folkemuseum offered a glimpse at life in the fjords from the 1600s until today.

After a ferry ride and overnight stay in Voss (the country's extreme sports capital but strangely not where they make the water), we made our way to Bergen, the bustling thousand-year-old port city. It draws hordes of tourists on cruise ships, but most of them don't bother to venture much beyond the waterfront area called Bryggen. We did, with a guide, who showed us the old wooden neighborhoods that have survived the centuries. In what used to be the red-light district, the whorehouses used Staffordshire dog figurines in the windows as a signal: If the dogs were facing out, there were prostitutes available; facing in, there was a wait. While we didn't visit the Leprosy Museum (for centuries, Bergen had Europe's highest incidence of the disease, and the doctor who discovered its cause was a local), we did see the equally unappetizing work by American artist Tony Matelli at KODE, the city's cluster of art museums. A major highlight, however, was visiting Edvard Grieg's home, Troldhaugen, where a hugely talented pianist named Christian Hundsnes Grøvlen gave a lunchtime concert in a hall overlooking the cabin and the lake where Grieg composed.

So is Norway perfect? Hell, no. There's a whale burger on almost every menu, and in winter, the sun barely makes it over the horizon. But it's a place of staggering beauty where the unexpected is the norm. In fact, there's a town in Stjordal called Hell, and every winter it freezes over. ◆

ART'S DESIRE

THE FALL ARTS SEASON ALWAYS brings surprises, but this year, it really seems like anything can happen. An artist's studio might pop up in a public library. A music collective could have the YouTube generation rocking out to ragtime. A night at the opera may pack enough sex and violence to make Bizet blush. You'll read about all that and more in our guide to some of the season's most exciting shows, concerts, exhibits and other must-sees. Elsewhere, Jonathan Soroff talks with NPR's Tom Ashbrook about kung fu flicks and the state of journalism today. Scott Kearnan checks out the music scene in Memphis for our Escape Artist column, and Paul Robicheau catches up with a Memphis-bred band coming to Boston. Meanwhile, Matt Martinelli goes behind the scenes with a couple of local theater directors, and Sarah Hagman rounds up writing implements that are stylish enough to banish writer's block. I'll stop there and let you uncover the rest of the surprises on your own. Happy reading.

LUKE AARON'S LATEST MUSE? A HISTORIC HOME TURNED RUNWAY

WORKING THE ROOM

Fashion designer Luke Aaron only had to travel around the corner from his Beacon Hill shop to find inspiration for his Spring/Summer 2017 collection. The tapestries, textured wallpaper and other decor at Mount Vernon Street's Nichols House Museum provided plenty of design cues for his new gowns and cocktail dresses. They'll make their debut on Sept. 28 during Boston Fashion Week in a Maison du Style presentation, which will have guests touring the 1804 townhouse while models wear pieces in the specific rooms that inspired their designs. It's all part of a Design on the Hill partnership that aims to showcase the neighborhood's artistic offerings. "It's really about connecting design and fashion and style with art and history," says Aaron, who gave us a tour and a sneak preview of his new designs. / Meghan Kavanaugh

DRESSED UP: Luke Aaron's latest collection includes dresses inspired by the dining room (pictured), the salon (left sketch) and the guest bedroom (right sketch) at the Nichols House Museum.

The Salon
Aaron found inspiration in the blues, greens and grays of the tapestry hanging in the salon, a room where Rose Standish Nichols, the landscape architect, writer and suffragist who lived in the home from 1885 till her death in 1960, would "have different meetings and soirees with people, and would discuss art and literature," he explains.

The Dining Room
In the dining room, embossed faux Japanese leather wallpaper with a vine pattern sparked the idea for embroidery and beading details seen throughout the entire collection. "You'll see the same kind of embroidery," Aaron explains, "but we've done it in different materials and different colors that relate to the color palette of each room."

The Rose Nichols Bedroom
The bed's canopy has floral embroidery that Aaron reinterpreted with a bohemian vibe in mind: "It's a good way to take those period floral patterns and incorporate them into that flower child aesthetic."

The Guest Bedroom
The guest bedroom's wall color "inspired a rose-hued silk gown with an overlay of lace embroidered with roses," Aaron says, noting that models in both bedrooms will sport pieces with softer color palettes that lean toward bridal.

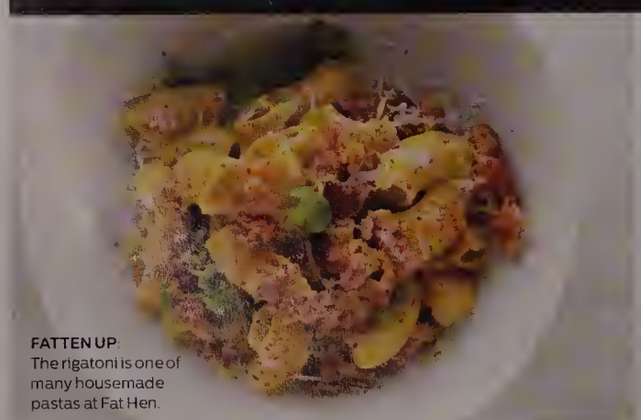
SHOOT FOR THE MOONA

EASTERN MEDITERRANEAN CUISINE IS HEADED FOR INMAN SQUARE.

Moona
243 Hompshire St., Cambridge
(617-945-7448)
moonorestouront.com

Mohamad El Zein watched from afar as the recent wave of Mediterranean restaurants opened, but he noticed there were not very many offering Eastern Mediterranean cuisine. He hopes his forthcoming Moona, set to open in October at the former Playska space in Inman Square, can fill that void.



"I'm from Lebanon, and my business partner [Radouan Ouassaidi] is from Morocco. We feel like there isn't a lot of representation in terms of Arabic food from the Levant region and the Arabic countries in North Africa," El Zein says. "If you look at a country like Morocco and a country like Lebanon, it's hard to find a commonality with the cuisines. But if you look at the pantry that countries in that region use, you'll find they use a lot of the same spices and things out of that pantry."

Meaning "pantry" in Arabic, Moona will have Mark McMann (Shepard, Ashmont Grill) in charge of the kitchen, serving a menu focused on hot and cold mezzas. ("The Greeks say meze, Arabs say mezza," El Zein notes.) A section at the top of the menu will offer five to six dips, such as eggplant zaalouk, to pair with pickled vegetables, like cauliflower and turnips, and three to four kinds of offal, such as brains and tongue. There will be a few larger dishes, including a Cornish hen served in a tagine and a vegetarian dish with hand-rolled couscous. Spice blends and wet mixes will all be housemade, and El Zein expects those spices will help Moona stand out.

"We here in the Western Hemisphere have this amazing vegetation. Why not use Swiss chard in the spring, and beets and apples in the fall, and all the things that are available to us, and then open that pantry up and use the different spices to make it more of the flavor profile of back in that area of the world," El Zein says.

Dessert will also reflect that philosophy, with Egyptian bread pudding as well as Turkish coffee warm pudding cake. (There'll be Turkish coffee service and Moroccan tea service too.) The wine list will also offer a few picks from the Bekaa Valley in Lebanon as well as other Mediterranean countries. The bar will seat 10, while the dining area will have 20 seats. No matter the size, El Zein is happy to see his passion turning into reality.

"I've wanted to do an Arabic restaurant for about five or six years. I wanted to do one that was more modern," El Zein explains. "There's so many authentic places, but there aren't that many that are coming out of the bubble and trying new things."

Good Eats: Fair Game

Get ready to carbo-load. With menu items ranging from bucatini to casonsei and spaghetti to tortellini, Somerville's Fat Hen has housemade pasta options aplenty. One standout from the hot spot that opened in La Brasa's former marketplace in August: the southern Italian-inspired rigatoni dish made with semolina flour and topped with house-ground rabbit sausage from Raynham's Feather Brook Farm. Fava beans, caciocavallo cheese and a dusting of controne chili and fennel pollen finish off a bowl that's as simple as it is indulgent. "We kind of try to keep the pasta as simplistic as possible," chef Michael Bergin says. "It's just two or three ingredients that let the pasta sing." / Meghan Kavanaugh

Drink of the Moment
PEACH HIGHBALL

PRICE: $12

INGREDIENTS: Mezcal, wine, peaches, lemon and spice. "Definitely conversation pieces," says Townsman bar manager Silas Axtell.

FLAVOR PROFILE: "I want to have something for the person who asks for something fruity," Axtell says. "We've built the cocktail around that component." It's echoed in the notes of dried fruit and fig in the Catalan rancio wine. "Essentially, it's a barrel of grapes that just gets totally oxidized and fermented," which makes it similar to a sherry. "I like working with wine because it makes cocktails more accessible from a food perspective."

PAIR IT WITH: The earthiness of the hanger steak served with Romesco and artichoke ($32), or fried dumplings with spinach ($11).

ORIGINS: After the kitchen staff was playing around with the peaches and Axtell's girlfriend brought home a chaat masala fruit salad from a co-worker, he was set on finding a nice combination of sweet and spice. One cook offered a curry spice mix—including cumin, coriander, pink peppercorns and a little bit of cayenne—while another suggested throwing in the smokiness of mezcal.

KITCHEN AID: Elsewhere on the drink menu, chefs have also lent a hand with the Medford Kid—"one of my favorite Tiki-ish drinks I've ever made," Axtell notes. The bar staff was making an orgeat with the traditional ingredient, almonds, when the kitchen staff chimed in. "They're like, 'You can make that out of anything,'" Axtell recalls, so they gave cashews a go and eventually landed on wheat berries, which add a touch of buttered popcorn flavor.

TAP THAT: Another new addition to the cocktail menu is the 1919, available on draft. Named for the year of the molasses flood, it's got whiskey, rum and mole bitters. But pull up a bar stool soon to try it. Of the constant menu changeup, Axtell says: "Nothing is safe." / Soroh Hogmon

FUNNY AS HELL

At age 69, Richard Lewis has never been busier. The veteran comedian is set to start filming a Nick Cassavetes heist caper alongside Peter Fonda and Andrew Dice Clay in February, reprise his role as Larry David's neurotic best buddy on the ninth season of HBO's Curb Your Enthusiasm and hit the road on his Tracks of My Fears stand-up tour, which stops at Laugh Boston Sept. 29-Oct. 1. We caught up with Lewis to talk shop before that five-show stand. / Alexondro Covollo

YOU'RE A BUSY MAN—HOW'S THINGS?
I fell off my roof in March and fractured my wrist. Why was I on the roof? I was trying to dispel the myth that a Jew can't look at a pipe. And it didn't work. So in fact I put in a beautiful light that anyone can see. It's as big as the Hollywood sign. It says, "Stay off the roof, you moron." But yeah, I had to cancel six months of work, but now things are cool.

WHY DID LARRY DAVID DECIDE TO BRING CURB BACK AFTER A FIVE-YEAR HIATUS?
I don't know. We went out to dinner like two or three weeks ago, and it was all over the Internet, but he didn't tell me. ... I got there a little early because I like to pay the check when we go out; he's done enough for me, God knows. He doesn't say anything. We're waiting for the valets to bring the cars, and he still hasn't said anything. I was bursting; I was almost having a breakdown. So I said, "Larry, congratulations on going back to the show. People are so excited." He said, "Yeah, yeah, yeah." So then I practically shouted, "Listen! Am I in it or not?!" It had been building for three hours. And he got angry! He said, "How dare you? Why would I go to dinner with you and tell you over a shrimp scampi that you're not back?" So, yeah, I'm really jazzed about that. Filming starts in November, allegedly. I've been doing this for 48 years, and to still be doing all this—I've never felt better onstage.

SPEAKING OF BEING ONSTAGE, DO YOU STILL GET NERVOUS? Well, the more anxious I am, the better I am as a performer. That's my sweet spot, anxiety.

Sunday in the Park with George

Ask the Experts

A SONDHEIM DUET

The curtain has risen on the fall theater season, and there's not one, but two Stephen Sondheim musicals on the boards—and they're both playing right now. The Lyric Stage's Company, directed by Spiro Veloudos runs through Oct. 9, while the Huntington Theatre Company's Sundoy in the Pork with George, directed by Peter DuBois, runs through Oct. 16 at the Avenue of the Arts/BU Theatre. The two companies have made a long-term commitment to exploring the 86-year-old New Yorker's work and will both take part in a Sondheim symposium at the Boston Center for Adult Education on Oct. 1. That's not the only connection: It turns out that early in their careers, Veloudos and DuBois both performed the same role in a Sondheim play—Pseudolus in A Funny Thing Hoppened on the Woy to the Forum. And both directors took the time to sound off on Sondheim to us. / Mott Mortinelli

ON WHAT MAKES A SONDHEIM MUSICAL SPECIAL...

DuBois: Sondheim captures the human experience in a way that can speak to you in every moment of your life. His characters range from 8 to 88, so no matter where you are in your life, you can relate to an experience his characters are having. As you grow older and come back to his work, you will catch yourself reacting to various moments differently.

Veloudos: There is an intelligence about his work that I think you don't find with any other writer of musical theater. And like Shakespeare, it doesn't matter how many times you have seen it; it's different. Sondheim is much the same. I have actually called him the Shakespeare of the Musical Stage.

ON THE SCENE IN THEIR SHOW THAT BEST EXEMPLIFIES SONDHEIM'S STYLE...

DuBois: Sundoy in the Pork with George is something that's always spoken to me creatively. There's an incredible song at the end of the show called "Move On." Every artist needs to hear that message at some point—that the only way forward may be leaving something behind—and moreover, every human being needs to hear that message at some point in their lives as well.

Veloudos: The scene [in Company] that I think has that sardonic humor that Sondheim is known for is the scene where Harry and Sarah are trying to one-up each other—Sarah is showing off her karate skills—and Joanne, as sort of a Greek chorus, comes out and sings, "It's the little things you do together." ... Immediately following that comic song, then Sondheim has Harry sing "Sorry/Grateful" in response to the question "Are you ever sorry that you got married?" A very funny scene with a comic song, followed immediately with a song, not so much of regret—a big motif in Sondheim's work—but one of reflection.

Out of 25 YEARS THE VAULT

The Improper is celebrating its 25th anniversary in 2016, and to properly mark the occasion, we've been digging through the archives for gems from issues past. Behold, some past autumnal arts highlights, from pop-culture trivia to some straight talk with Denis Leary.

Sept. 16, 1992

Want to win a free CD? (That's a compact disc, for you Millennials—it's sort of like the unwieldy, scratched-up physical manifestation of a Spotify stream.) Readers in 1992 did, and to get it they just had to answer two simple pop music questions: "What is Moby's real name, and who is his famous relative?" Props to any '90s pop culture historians who can ace this today. (Answer below.)

Sept. 8, 2004

Denis Leary, one of Boston's favorite and most endearingly cantankerous sons, starred on the cover of our '04 Fall Arts Preview. Jonathan Soroff caught up with the Emerson alum just as his then-new show Rescue Me kicked off what would be a seven-year prime-time run, asking him if he'd ever considered anger management. Leary's response? "It's called Jameson Irish Whiskey."

8 YEARS AGO

Nov. 19, 2008

In this edition of Soroff On, comedian, CBS correspondent and Harvard alum Mo Rocca was asked the best use for a Harvard diploma. And while it doesn't seem to hurt when it comes to landing a gig at a major broadcast news outlet, Rocca had a more creative answer: "Lining a litter box is interesting, because it's absorbent. But it's very thick, too, so if you run out of Styrofoam peanuts, you could use it to pack up delicate items."

FAR FROM THE TREE

AN ABANDONED CHILD CONNECTS TWO WOMEN IN A PUSHCART PRIZE WINNER'S SECOND NOVEL

HOLLY RIKE

Leaving Lucy Pear* by Anna Solomon
Published by Viking, 336 pages, $26

WHEN UNWED MOTHER BEA LEAVES her baby Lucy under pear trees, it is Emma, already a mother of nine, who saves her. They're two very different women. Emma is a feisty Irish fisherman's wife who boldly makes pear moonshine during Prohibition in Gloucester. Bea is a young Jewish pianist raised by a socially anxious mother who strives to mimic WASP ways, encouraging a military officer to flirt with her daughter—whom he then, fatefully, impregnates.

Bea goes on to Radcliffe, but her hidden pain leads her to drop out and sink into despondency. She marries the secretly gay Albert, who knows nothing of her lost Lucy, and tipples in private while publicly promoting the "dry" position and writing speeches for mayoral candidate Josiah Story. Emma, meanwhile, has an affair with Story, who runs the stone quarry where the thrillingly independent Lucy feigns boyhood to work alongside her brothers.

Gloucester native Anna Solomon threads class differences and ironies throughout her sophisticated narrative, set during the tumultuous political times when Sacco and Vanzetti were executed. Through her ornately descriptive style, we get to know the inner and outer selves of the co-mothers, whose lives intersect and eventually reconnect when Emma is hired as a nurse for Bea's ailing uncle. The climactic realization leads to pain for both women—but daughters, we see, are not necessarily constrained by parental torment.

FROM PAGE 47: When Lucy was a baby, a woman had hovered at the fringes of Emma's thoughts, without face or name, a receptacle for whatever Emma might feel for her at any given moment. Pity. Incomprehension. Disgust. Pity again. She even felt guilty toward her, as if Emma had stolen Lucy against the woman's wishes. Her guilt, perhaps, helped explain why the Murphys had not found another orchard for their pears. Maybe, though her heart did not stop clanging the entire time they picked, Emma felt she had to give the woman the chance to take Lucy back. ◆

The Escape Artist / Scott Kearnan

ROCKIN' IN MEMPHIS

LIVE LIKE THE KING IN TENNESSEE'S DESTINATION FOR BLUES, BOOZE AND HISTORY.

Nashville and Memphis are both music-centric cities. But if the former is Carrie Underwood—a center-stage idol with big, high hair and big, shiny belt buckles—then the latter is her scrappier, soulful younger sister, strumming the blues in the state's southwest corner and shooting whiskey out of a plastic cup.

Be honest. Who would you rather hang with?

Tennessee's largest city, Memphis was founded in 1819, 40 years after the Volunteer State's capital. But it somehow feels older, more storied, with more secrets waiting within the walls of its enduring, eclectic architecture—from art deco to neoclassical—on the swampy banks of the Mississippi River. Nashville, now the de facto Southern choice for destination bachelorettes, has glitz and glamour. But Memphis, often dubbed the birthplace of rock 'n' roll and a prominent place in the history of the civil rights movement, feels full of grit and ghosts.

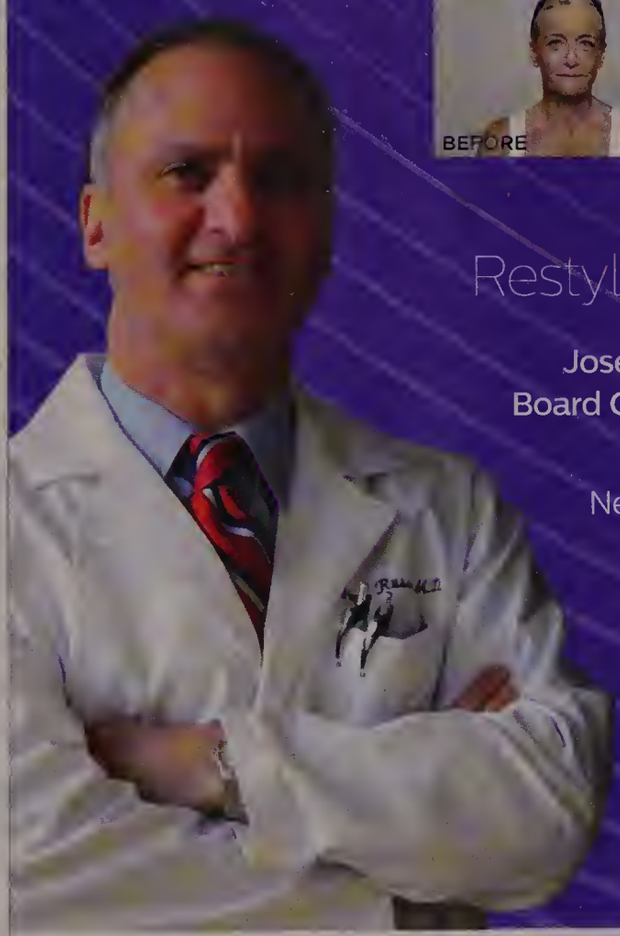
Your preferred haunt should be the Madison Hotel, a four-diamond downtown property that, like native son Justin Timberlake, dresses up old-school Memphis charm in trendy, tailored suit-and-tie style. In its lobby (and select suites), headphone-equipped Traveler guitars beg guests to wail away. On-site restaurant Eighty3 lures diners with a weekend Hallelujah Brunch serving bourbon-peach schnapps cocktails and Southern specialties like Elvis waffles, loaded with the King's favorite combo of peanut butter, banana and bacon. And vinyl record-lined elevators deliver guests from the fitness center, housed inside a former bank vault, to the Twilight Sky Terrace, a fire pit-bedecked rooftop bar with a front-row view of the Mississippi River. Add whiskey. Sip. Repeat.

From the Madison's central address, you're well positioned to go walking—and dancing, drinking and eating—in Memphis. Start with touristy draws that genuinely deserve a visit. Amble down neon-lit Beale Street, the history-steeped Broadway of blues, ducking into suds-soaked venues to hear country, jazz and bluegrass musicians. Even the worst of them blow bar bands elsewhere out of the water. (Overwhelmed by options? Start at Rum Boogie Cafe, which strikes a great balance between tourist-friendly fun and local-music-lover credibility.) Devout music fans can worship at Sun Studio, a national historic landmark open to tours, where stars like Johnny

WISEACRE BREWING; JUSTIN FOX BURKS

Cash, Jerry Lee Lewis and Elvis first committed rock to wax. But even the casually curious should pilgrimage to Presley's old palace on the city's outskirts, Graceland, even if just to gape agog at the mansion's thrillingly kitsch, of-an-era ostentation; never have copious crystal and avocado shag carpeting been such beautiful bedfellows. In October the estate opens its first hotel, the 450-room Guest House at Graceland, and in spring debuts a $45 million entertainment complex, the largest addition since Graceland's 1982 opening, with multiple restaurants, museums and a live music venue.

More somber but stirring is the National Civil Rights Museum, filled with interactive exhibits that capture the movement's history. The recently renovated institution is attached to the former Lorraine Motel, the site of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s assassination in 1968, and his room, 306—never rented since—remains on view as a memorial.



But Memphis isn't mired in the past. Though unscientific studies suggest Nashville may boast a few more hipsters per square mile, those seeking Memphis' modern energy will find an especially high dose in Cooper-Young, an artsy historic neighborhood with eclectic shops and funky bars and restaurants. Among the best are the Beauty Shop, a borderline-camp New American eatery where diners dig into seriously great food—like crispy duck with muddled blackberries and pecan-crusted trout with plum salsa—from the dryer chairs of a 1950s-style salon. Nearby cocktail joint Alchemy mixes top-notch elixirs, muddling grapes in pisco and spiking rye with black tea, while serving shareable global small plates. Poke around Goner Records, an old-school record shop from a local indie label focused on punk and garage bands.

Outside the concentrated cool of Cooper-Young, Uber will be helpful for bouncing between the city's more scattered standouts, from groovy craft suds maker Wiseacre Brewing's singles-baiting taproom off Broad Avenue, a revitalizing arts district, to the dim lo-fi dive that is Midtown's Buccaneer Lounge, where live bands jam in what feels like a cheap beer-soaked ashtray. (That's meant as a compliment.) Fussier tastes may prefer the big-budget vibe of Lafayette's Music Room in nearby Overton Square, a historic multi-floor music hall and Southern restaurant reopened in 2014 after nearly four decades gone dark. There's Memphis in a nutshell: a pop of electricity in a quiet corner of the South. ◆

STICK TO THE RIBS: The Smoke Shop's 1st Place Ribs live up to the moniker.

SMOKIN' ACES

THE SMOKE SHOP COULD GIVE YANKEE BBQ A GOOD NAME.

YEARS AGO, KENDALL SQUARE WAS A TECH magnet and a restaurant desert. In 2016, tech's still here, along with pharma and biotech, but the dining scene has improved mightily. In the One Kendall complex alone, there's veteran indie the Blue Room, sweet little wine bar Belly, Jewish deli deluxe Mamaleh's and fine bar/restaurant/game room State Park. Now comes the Smoke Shop BBQ, a barbecue joint from Andy Husbands (Tremont 647), building on his years of success with competition barbecue team IQUE. His skills here with slow-smoke cookery often shine brilliantly, especially by the wan standards of Yankee barbecue.

Bread-and-butter pickles ($3) set the right opening note: pretty, crisp, not too sweet. There's a bit of strange North/South confluence in belly and skin ($14), crunchy fried pork rinds topping a mess of fried whole-belly clams with good creamed corn underneath: a Mason/Dixon-spanning surf 'n' turf. New-style deviled egg BLT ($9), which offers great house-smoked bacon, slices of lettuce and tomato and Green Goddess dressing, is neither deviled egg nor BLT, and with a stone-cold soft-poached egg bizarrely coated in hot sauce, a weird dud. With luck, you've opted instead for the Best Bar Wings ($9 for six), which violates a rule of expectation-setting in dish naming, but in fact is terrific: long-smoked and then crisp-fried wings with a sticky sweet/hot glaze of agave syrup.

Of course, the 'Q is the thing here, and it's mostly exceptional, starting with the again self-puffingly named 1st Place Ribs ($22 for half-slab, $31 full). I guess it's not bragging if you won the award, and these ribs are indeed spectacular: oversized, meaty, juicy pork ribs cut in the St. Louis style (ends trimmed off) with an evident smoke ring indicating deep penetration of smoke and accompanying profoundly smoky flavor. With their vivid sprinkling of hot spices, no sauce is needed. I will tell everyone I know to order these.

IQUE won another prestigious prize for its brisket, but here it's just called brisket ($19.50); it's also exemplary, with a nicely defined, flavorful bark (the rindy outer coating composed of dry spices, fat, smoke, the Maillard reaction and dark magic) and just enough residual fat to leave the meat delectably moist but not greasy. Pulled pork ($17) and burnt ends of brisket ($17.50) also boast deep smoke flavor and the hoped-for mix of tender and chewy textures, though both run a little lean and dry, easily corrected with either of two excellent tomato-based house sauces, the "hot" imparting a modest capsicum tingle. Fiercer heat is found in the fine Texas-style hot links ($16), a smooth-textured natural-casing pork sausage. Glazed BBQ chicken thigh ($15) is a straight-up smoked treatment, the use of thighs yielding a lovely richness and firm texture complemented by a sweet, mahogany-tinged glaze. With two sides, plus a mound of vivid pickles and a slice of watermelon, these are substantial plates, but trenchermen can combine most options into two-meat ($24, with two sides) and three-meat ($26, with three sides) platters.

Speaking of sides, most of the Smoke Shop's are superb (and available à la carte for $3-$6). Standouts include bacon-laden collards that find the perfect midpoint between mushy and chewy, fabulously smoky, brisket-flecked pit beans, farro beautifully dotted with corn, cherry tomatoes and candied walnuts, Texas toast (thick slices of white bread smeared with hot sauce and parsley-enhanced garlic butter) and pimiento mac & cheese with the creaminess of Cheez Whiz (not a bad thing). But my hopes for a more traditional, crunchy, savory Southern cornbread were dashed by the typical New England style offered here: sweet and moist as cake, sweeter still with honey/sea-salt butter.

A couple of non-barbecue entrees should not be overlooked. One is shrimp and grits ($22), big pan-seared shrimp in a richly aromatic Creole sauce, served alongside grits fries, a nifty treatment that turns soft grits into pan-crisped Lincoln logs for stacking around dill-flecked cucumber salad. The other is a fine plate of fried chicken ($22 with two sides), juicy from buttermilk brine, with a medium-thick batter coating ably fried to a non-oily crunch.

Desserts ($2, $5.50 for three) are small and modest, the butter cake and vanilla-brownie-like S'more stuffed with Taza chocolate chunks and Fluff the most inner-child-pleasing. The roomy bar features one of the city's better whiskey lists (with 100-plus options, mostly American), a rather good beer selection, a short and forgettable wine list and cocktails that are serviceable but a little pricey, e.g., a Mezcal Paloma that featured an anemic spirit pour for a $12 highball. The sparely decorated bar and dining rooms, notably the larger room surmounted by the open kitchen, can make quiet conversation challenging, especially as they feature nine big TVs tuned to sports. These lend the joint a sports-bar vibe that clearly is a hit with the early tech-bro-heavy crowds, but other patrons may find a trifle distracting. Service finds a fitting note of casual familiarity and hits its marks nicely, even on booming weekend nights. Overall, the Smoke Shop delivers the real slow-smoke BBQ goods at a level that New England rarely sees, and on a few scores—namely the ribs, brisket and sides—might even stand up further south and west. ◆

Q: I AM RELATIVELY HAPPY WITH MY APPEARANCE, EXCEPT THAT I INHERITED MY FATHER'S DOUBLE-CHIN. WHAT CAN I DO ABOUT THE FAT UNDER MY CHIN?

A: There is a brand new, non-surgical option to for permanently removing fat under your chin: Kybella. Recently approved by the FDA, Kybella is injected under the chin to dissolve stubborn fat. That fat is gone permanently, giving you a nicely contoured jawline once again.

Kybella is made from deoxycholic acid, which is a natural substance found in our bodies that aids in the breakdown of fat cells. When Kybella is injected, the fat cells are destroyed and those cells can no longer store or accumulate fat.

Whether you have a little fat under your chin or a lot, Kybella can be used to safely dissolve the fat away to give you the profile you have always wanted.

BRACE FOR IMPACT

TOM HANKS STICKS THE LANDING IN CLINT EASTWOOD'S THRILLING BIOPIC SULLY.

OVER THE YEARS, AND NEARLY EVERY time a history-based drama starring Tom Hanks comes along, reporters and critics make the observation that the actor is "the new Jimmy Stewart." But isn't it about time that we recognize the two-time Oscar winner for who he really is? While Hanks certainly projects as much decency and easygoing integrity as Stewart, he has his own style, his own winsome rhythms, and an inherent goodness that sets him apart as his own man. If we're lucky enough to ever see another actor come along with this kind of charisma and career, perhaps the best compliment we might pay this hypothetical performer will be to refer to him as "the new Tom Hanks." But for now, we have the real thing, a man at the top of his profession in the fourth decade of his career, giving one of his best performances while working for another legend for the first time.

That legend is Clint Eastwood, an 86-year-old actor who has carved out a significant second career as director, having won four Oscars for his efforts, including his masterpiece, 1992's deconstructionist Western, Unforgiven. And while his latest film may not be remembered as a classic, it's another in a string of biographies of real-life figures that Eastwood has focused on as he's settled into the director's chair. His latest subject? Chesley "Sully" Sullenberger, an airline pilot known for saving the lives of 155 people in the "Miracle on the Hudson," when a dual-engine failure found the captain heroically gliding US Airways Flight 1549 into a forced water landing on the Hudson River just minutes after departing New York's LaGuardia Airport on Jan. 15, 2009.

The 60-year-old Hanks, his thin, dark hair dyed white with a mustache to match, is an obvious choice to portray the then 58-year-old Sully, a humble hero the world came to know through numerous television appearances when the soft-spoken man was thrust into the spotlight. But Eastwood is known for taking liberties with history, infusing extra doses of drama where little existed.

Eastwood and screenwriter Todd Komarnicki have taken some questionable liberties in adapting Sullenberger's book, Highest Duty, a memoir co-written by Jeffrey Zaslow.

"In the end, I'm going to be judged on 208 seconds," says this film's Sully, a haunted man. When we first see him, he's waking from a nightmare in a cold sweat, his head silhouetted in closeup in a darkened hotel room in Midtown Manhattan as a thin shaft of light settles across Hanks' shellshocked eyes, his breathing labored. It's the eve of an initial inquiry about the accident that began when the plane was struck by a flock of Canadian geese during its initial climb. Sully and First Officer Jeff Skiles (a jovial Aaron Eckhart) will sit before three stone-faced, fictional members of the National Transportation Safety Board (Boston-born Mike O'Malley, Jamey Sheridan and Breaking Bad's Anna Gunn), who seem more willing to burn a witch at the stake than to praise the heroic actions of Sullenberger and Skiles, as the real NTSB did in the historical record.

But then, Eastwood is known for taking liberties with history, infusing extra doses of drama where little existed. In his last picture, 2014's wildly successful American Sniper, Eastwood inflated a Syrian sniper who was mentioned in a single paragraph of the late Chris Kyle's memoir into a full-blown nemesis who stalked Kyle, just as the visions of a crash that didn't happen stalk Sully's subconscious here. And like the movie marriage depicted between Kyle and his wife, Sully's marriage plays out over the telephone, with Laura Linney doing the best she can in a fairly thankless role as Lorraine, worrying about her husband and their unstable finances as the media swarms outside their home.

But fictionalized or not, the drama in this film works well. An event that took place over the course of 24 minutes in real life plays out during 96 expertly edited minutes that present the forced landing three separate times, from different points of view—that of the onlookers, the passengers and the crew—in each of the film's three acts. The longest look comes during the rescue effort itself, as hundreds of New Yorkers, the memories of 9/11 no doubt still fresh in their minds, quickly mobilize to help save every last passenger of the doomed flight, pulling them from the icy waters of the Hudson. You may shed a tear as Eastwood displays the best of humanity, anchored by Hanks' pitch-perfect performance as a beautiful little piano theme (composed by Eastwood himself) delicately plays under the rescue.

And while some of the fictionalized drama with the NTSB may bring the film's highs back down to earth, the visual effects soar. Far from showy, they make it appear as though Eastwood has captured the action as it happened; you believe what you're watching, and it's thrilling. ◆ plays the Copenhagen Beer & Music Celebration at City Hall Plaza on Sept. 24.

HOME BREWED

LONGTIME MEMPHIS ROWDIES ROUND OUT THEIR SOUND AND LIFESTYLE

Ben Nichols, the grainy-voiced heart and soul of alt-country rockers Lucero, wastes no time in raising an obvious point about his band's Sept. 24 date at the Copenhagen Beer & Music Celebration on City Hall Plaza. "Our music seems to go pretty well with that kind of crowd," he says. "Lucero's always been good drinking music."

Indeed, the Tennessee group's party-hearty reputation has become ingrained during an 18-year run of spirited, occasionally shambolic nights. "Lucero's never been known as the most professional of bands," says Nichols, 42. "There's been some really rough shows along the way, but there's been some brilliant shows as well. But right now we're actually playing better than ever before. We're a little more focused on actually playing the songs and trying to play them well."

Over the years, the heavily tattooed band only heightened its image through Nichols' hard-bitten lyrics about life on the road, kissing the bottle and missing homebound relationships. "From the beginning of Lucero, pretty much all the songs are taken directly from our life," he says. "They're pretty literal."

And in that sense, Lucero has clearly grown since Nichols traded bass for guitar and launched his country-punk crew with guitarist Brian Venable, bassist John C. Stubblefield and drummer Roy Berry, later adding keyboardist Rick Steff. For one thing, three of the original members got married and have children. "I cashed in. I'm out," Nichols says. "Luckily I waited until the right woman came long... She puts up with me and all the ridiculousness that is being in a touring band."

"We never thought it would last this long. It's still the best job on the planet."

Drinking's still part of his life on tour, but it's different at home. "It's definitely healthier," Nichols says. "I can be away from that now, whereas before, when I'd go home, it just kind of continued on. The road never stopped."

The songs on Lucero's 2015 album All a Man Should Do reflect those changes. "Throwback No. 2" conveys an outright marriage proposal, and in "The Man I Was," Nichols sings, "None of those young girls could understand how slowly killing oneself takes a toll on a man... I paid for my sins. I will start again."

"I have the feeling most people can relate to that in one way or another," Nichols says. "It doesn't have to be drinking or whatever. It can be whatever demons are following someone."

Musically, the group has evolved as well, with a nod to its Memphis roots. Steff injected some boogie-woogie piano. Then they added horns akin to the classic Stax Records sound. Horns carry over to a lesser degree on All a Man Should Do, along with more acoustic guitar—and a softer tone that's partly represented in concert. "Folks like singing along to slow, sad songs too," Nichols says.

Jody Stephens from '70s power-pop icon Big Star even lent harmonies to the album's cover of his former group's "I'm in Love with a Girl," which came about partly because he works at Ardent Studios, where Lucero recorded on Big Star's old turf. "It makes perfect sense," Nichols says. "We were going in the direction of Big Star, which is also extremely important Memphis music, with a more subtle, complex and nuanced kind of sound."

Yet when it comes to his core musical influences, Nichols says, "They're probably still similar to what they've always been." He cites Tom Waits, the Pogues, the Replacements, Bruce Springsteen, Johnny Cash and Social Distortion among his inspirations, favoring singers with similarly weathered voices. "I've never taken the best care of my voice, but I'm not trying to sing like someone competing on The Voice," Nichols says. "What I do is appropriate for the music."

At least Lucero has cut back from a previous pace of 250 shows per year. "In the old days, we all lived in the same crappy kind of warehouse with no central heat or air and broken windows, and we toured around in a white cargo van with a loft built in the back," Nichols says. "We never thought it would last this long. It's still the best job on the planet, and we're still having a blast." ◆

SOUTH OF THE BORDER

MY GRAND TOUR OF MEXICO, COURTESY OF A CANADIAN DUNE BUGGY.

As the election nears, immigration is a controversial issue. I understand the debate, because I grew up in a border state: Maine, which is defended to the north by Castle Black. But I don't know much about Mexico. So I went there, the better to understand the cultural and anthropological ramifications of U.S. immigration policy at this contentious political moment. Also: to drive dune buggies. OK, completely to drive dune buggies.

I thought that getting into Mexico would be a little bit of a stressful process, as border crossings tend to be. But no, not really. In fact, you drive across the border from San Diego so fast that the banks of cameras scanning traffic don't even have time to process whether your car is stolen. I'm riding with our off-road tour leader, Bruce, who explains, "The cameras take 30 seconds to run your plate. That's usually long enough that stolen cars are already across the border before they can be stopped." So why not just move the cameras back up the ramp, so they'd read the plates sooner? Good question. In any event, I have my passport ready, but nobody wants to look at it. Welcome to Mexico!

We drive two hours south, to Ensenada, and check into a ramshackle hotel, which is the only kind they have in Ensenada. I drink a couple beers at the bar (total tab: $3.43) and then wander into town to find a souvenir. I settle on a sign that reads "Cerveza Por Favor" made out of scraps of license plates. The vendor notes my Red Sox hat and asks if I like the Patriots. I say that I do, and he replies, "I'm sick of them. Every year, the Patriots." I inform him that Tom Brady is suspended, though, and I think that makes him feel better. As does my overpaying for a sign made out of license plates.

I spend the next two days scorching across Baja in turbocharged side-by-sides made by Can-Am, in Quebec—just an American driving a Canadian dune buggy in Mexico, like everyone hoped would happen when they drafted NAFTA. Down in Baja, they don't seem too concerned about, say, whether your vehicle is registered or whether you're ripping doughnuts on the beach or doing 87 mph on a trail that might be a road (it's sometimes hard to tell the difference). Nonetheless, I overhear one of my fellow drivers earnestly declare, "You come down here, see how people live, and it makes you thankful for the freedoms that we have in America." I want to point out that we'd come to Mexico precisely because we don't have the freedom to engage in long-distance buggy travel in America, but I hold my tongue. Seriously, though—the day before, I saw a guy on a unicycle juggling bowling pins at a stoplight. Mexico might have problems, but freedom doesn't seem to be one of them.

After two days of miraculously not driving off a cliff or smashing into any cows, it's time to head back to San Diego. The process heading north is considerably more rigorous. The line of cars is stacked an hour deep, but we take advantage of an insider trick: the medical emergency lane, which is evidently reserved for A) medical emergencies and B) anyone who bought a card that says you have a medical emergency. The card gets you in a special lane that heads right to the front. The fact that there is no actual medical emergency in our particular van doesn't seem relevant to anyone involved. But a guy named Joe says, "If anyone asks, my allergies are really acting up."

In any event, I have my passport ready, but nobody wants to look at it. Welcome to Mexico!

Even in the bribe lane, though, we have to do some waiting. Which means I have time to check out the billboard advertising butt implants. I mean, I don't speak Spanish, but the photo makes it pretty clear what kind of treatment you'll get at that particular clinic. Imagine that conversation on your way back over the border. "So, what was the nature of your business in Tijuana? And why are you sitting on that phone book?" Anyway, Tijuana Butt Implants is the new name for my fantasy football team.

We're routed to a secondary inspection station, where a sign warns, "Your actions and conversations are being recorded." While we're waiting there, two of the Canadians in our group begin discussing a province-to-province taxation disparity that led to bikers smuggling tanker trucks full of maple syrup.

That's totally badass, but I wish they'd shut up about smuggling, in the event that the border agents holding our passports are actually listening. Mexico is neither as scary nor as alien as it's so often made out to be, but right now I appreciate the meaning of that passport. It's awesome that we can drive to a foreign country where there are juggling unicyclists, discount cosmetic surgeons and dollar cervezas. But it's also nice to come back. ◆

Soroff On / Tom Ashbrook

THE NPR HOST OPINES ON DONALD TRUMP, KUNG FU FILMS AND DYNAMITE FIELDS.

NATIONALLY SYNDICATED RADIO HOST AND AWARD-winning journalist Tom Ashbrook, 60, was born and raised in Bloomington, Illinois, and studied at Yale University and Andhra University in India. Before becoming a journalist, he worked as a surveyor in Alaska and as a Hong Kong television personality. He spent 10 years in Asia, reporting first for The South China Morning Post and then for The Boston Globe. He served as deputy managing editor of The Globe until 1996, when he became a Nieman fellow at Harvard. His four-year stint as an internet entrepreneur is chronicled in his book The Leap: A Memoir of Love and Madness in the Internet Gold Rush. After 9/11, he was recruited by WBUR and NPR to host On Point, a daily two-hour news program broadcast nationally. He lives in Newton.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Most bizarre thing you've ever heard in the news?
TOM ASHBROOK: Every second thing out of Donald Trump's mouth. What's more bizarre than a presidential candidate without bounds? That's something so new it freaks me out.

It feels like the news cycle continues to shorten. How has that affected On Point? We're ready to change topics on very short notice, and we do. It's not uncommon for us to plan something in the morning and then shift in the afternoon to something that's hotter. On the other hand, we don't want to jump around like fleas. If something's important, you want to keep your eye trained on it. We can all get lost in the popping popcorn of the 5-minute news cycle. We try to keep our eye on the prize.

You lived in Hong Kong for many years. Favorite food city in the world? Yeah. I lived in India, Hong Kong and Tokyo. They're all really great food locations, but Hong Kong just pulls the most strands together. No place has as much going on, as vividly, and certainly with Asian cuisines, as Hong Kong.

Is it true that you produced kung fu films? [Laughs.] Yes. I had a show on Hong Kong television, and I got a call from a guy who said he could use my help. They had a pipeline to bring very funky, old-school, pre-revolutionary kung fu films out of China, black and white. From the '30s and '40s, pre-Mao. So we would dub them into English and sell them all over the world. I would sit at night in the old Diamond Hill movie studios, where Bruce Lee made all his movies, and I would write the scripts based on nothing. I had old film canisters that you'd mount on a projector and pump with your foot, and I didn't speak the dialects, so I'd just write the script as it went along. Then we dubbed it, with lots of whiskey and cigarettes, and it was great fun.

Most reliable sources for news? I read The Times, The Wall Street Journal, the major magazines, the online outlets. I try to be as diverse as I can. Of course, I listen to NPR, and then I listen to that babbling brook on Twitter or wherever, where they take me off in all different directions.

Journalist you admire the most? I guess it sounds super old-school, but I'll go back to Edward R. Murrow. The way he went to where the news was, the way he'd be thinking honestly and courageously, as the news unfolded, bringing you the facts, with a sense of context...He wasn't afraid to depict a larger picture beyond individual data points.

"We can all get lost in the popping popcorn of the 5-minute news cycle. We try to keep our eye on the prize."

Do you think there's such a thing as journalistic objectivity? There's the effort, the desire. That's important. Whether we ever deliver it is a different question. Maybe we can't. We all come with our presumptions and maybe prejudices. But the effort to achieve objectivity, or at least know the difference between that and opining, is an important distinction.

Who's your all-time favorite guest on On Point? God, so many, but I loved Annie Leibovitz. It was not long after she'd photographed her longtime partner, Susan Sontag, at the end of her life. And in radio, we don't talk about photography much, because you can't see it, but you could hear what made her so powerful as a photographer, because she had such a powerful conceptual framework and a deep humanity and intelligence. We were talking about images the listener couldn't see, and yet everything was hyper-alive.

Biggest story of your career? In my editing days, the fall of the Berlin Wall and the end of the Cold War. As a correspondent, the rise of Asia. I was in Hong Kong for the handover, and it was one of those epic signifiers of how power was moving east. Seeing Asia emerge from poverty to power and glory was an amazing thing.

One headline you dream of seeing? The Era of Hyper-Polarized America Is Over.

Person from history you most would have liked to interview? If I were George W. Bush, I'd have to say Jesus. But as a born-and-raised Illinois kid, I'm going to have to go with Lincoln. There's nobody I'd rather sit and talk with.

Most bizarre fan encounter? I don't know about bizarre, but some of them are touching. I've been asked to marry people. A couple, both very shy, who worked at a bakery, listened to my show every night and then talked about it. They asked me to marry them. As it turned out, because of the timing, I couldn't do it, but it was so touching.

Thing people might be surprised to learn about you? Maybe that I worked in Alaska in dynamite fields to pay for college. I blew up big chunks of Alaska, which I'm not particularly proud of anymore. Also, and PETA would hate this, I was a trapper when I was young. I now renounce that, but I did do it as a young guy.

So is news entertainment? There's a fine line with news. I came from old-school journalism, 100 percent serious. In the years since then, around 9/11, the influence of social media, changing public tastes, my perception is that people want more personality. So just simply reciting facts, without revealing the penumbra of your own personality and how it relates to those facts, people no longer trust. Even here, on NPR, I could feel people wanting more of my personality than for years I was willing to give. I've begun to soften with that, because there's a new standard. If you don't give some of yourself with the news, there's a reluctance to trust you.

Accomplishment you're most proud of? My family, without question. But professionally? I feel like I've always tried to hold the flag up for humanity, and respect and intelligence. ◆

Bounty of Arts

From dancing pirates to hidden paintings, our picks for the fall cultural season.

BY THE IMPROPER STAFF

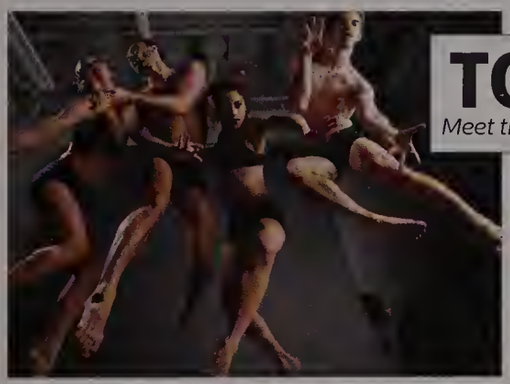
Historical Footnotes

Boston Ballet returns from its record-breaking 2015-2016 season—which saw the highest attendance in more than a decade on top of the biggest box-office revenue in its 53-year history—with Le Corsaire, loosely based on Lord Byron's epic inspired by French-American privateer Jean Laffite. The ballet follows the young and beautiful Medora, sold by her father to a wealthy Turkish pasha and rescued not once but twice by her love interest Conrad—but even those familiar with the swashbuckling tale may be unaware of how it led to a real-life treasure hunt a decade ago. With the help of dance historian and musicologist Doug Fullington, Czech choreographer Ivan Liška dug into the Harvard Theatre Collection, which houses a trove of documents preserving the 19th-century works of St. Petersburg's Imperial Ballet. Their goal: to recreate Le Corsaire as audiences would have seen it in Marius Petipa's 1899 staging.

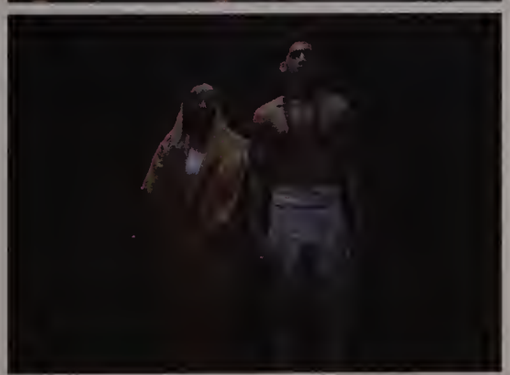
During the course of nine months, the pair scoured museums, studied photographs and deciphered handwritten notations, uncovering two long-lost character dances and filling in missing variations. "I imagined Mr. Petipa sitting there," Liška says of the empty chair he left beside him while choreographing. "I tried to feel his intentions." Liška's Le Corsaire premiered with the Bavarian State Opera Ballet in 2007, and it'll make its North American debut on Oct. 27-Nov. 6 at the Boston Opera House, with 113 Boston Ballet dancers showing off some moves modern audiences might not be used to seeing.

"Many of the steps, which were written down in the old score, we have forgotten. We don't do them anymore," Liška says, noting some were originally performed on demi pointe and even featured a different carrying of the arms and neck, more akin to what one might expect to see in an Edgar Degas painting. Still, "His steps were not dry," Liška insists. "They were dramaturgically, musically, absolutely 100 percent not only necessary, but they fit the situation." He spent 15 days with Boston Ballet to help the dancers master those steps—not to mention the tricky matter of integrating the plot's pantomime with the music. "Ivan was teaching me how to act for the audience," explains principal dancer Seo Hye Han, who stars as Medora. "He said, 'Don't make anything fake.' "

While the moves may be a touch unfamiliar, Liška expects the story to resonate, no matter how far off the world of kidnapping buccaneers may seem. "It's a romantic style of living, not always being responsible for what you do," he says of the appeal. "Take what you love, whether it's money or a woman. It's the perfume of adventure."



URBANITY DANCE



COMPANY TOWN

More dance dates with local troupes

On Oct. 14-30, José Mateo Ballet Theatre opens its 31st season with Impelling Forces, a program that includes 1796, a love triangle paired with Beethoven's moody Cello Sonata No. 2 in G Minor, and Mozart Provoked, which features a bit of uncharacteristic sass set to experimental musician Uri Caine's jazzy interpretation of the composer's Sonata in C Major for piano. Drink it all in at the Sanctuary Theatre with sips from Forage's Stan Hilbert, who's kicking off a wine curation program that'll have a different bar star pouring picks at each production.

Urbanity Dance returns to the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum's courtyard on Oct. 29 for pop-up performances during an all-day Dante Festival, which will have two dancers improvising in response to cantos from the Italian poet's Divine Comedy. Then on Nov. 18, the full 10-member company takes the stage at the Strand Theatre for Call of Courage, a collaboration with the City of Boston that draws inspiration from local middle and high schoolers' stories of bullying.

TOURS DE FORCE

Meet three cool companies dancing through town this fall.

With powerful athleticism and popular songs, Philadelphia-based BalletX ushers solid classical technique into the modern world. Take co-founder Matthew Neenan—who began his training at Boston Ballet School—and his The Last Glass, which taps indie-rock outfit Beirut's The Flying Club Cup. The company's Boston debut also showcases intimate duet It's Not o Cry, choreographed to Jeff Buckley's haunting rendition of "Hallelujah," and Delicote Bolance from Robert Joffrey and William Forsythe mentee Jodie Gates. Oct. 21-22 at the ICA

The Suzy Newhouse Center welcomes Amsterdam's Shailesh Bahoran, who combines traditional Indian dance with hip-hop, breaking and funk with his Illusionary Rockaz Crew. They'll tackle Lalla Rookh, a tale of 19th-century immigrants who believe they're en route to the Land of God but soon discover they've arrived in Suriname as indentured workers. Nov. 10 ot Wellesley College

Named for co-founder Adi Sha'al's experience during military training, the contemporary Vertigo Dance Company leaves behind its eco-art village nestled in an Israeli mountainside—where members rehearse in mud-wall studios and drink purified rain water—for a Celebrity Series appearance and Boston debut. The evening includes a performance of Vertigo 20, a reflection on its two-decade run. Oct. 29-30 ot the Shubert Theotre

A RENDEZVOUS WITH CARMEN

Boston Lyric Opera opens its 40th anniversary season with Carmen on Sept. 23-Oct. 2, bringing opera back to the Boston Opera House for the first time in 25 years. A co-production with the San Francisco Opera, the show marks the U.S. debut of provocative Catalan director Calixto Bieito and stars mezzo-soprano Jennifer Johnson Cano in the title role. She lent us her voice for a few questions.

HOW DOES THIS STAGING OF CARMEN DIFFER FROM YOUR PREVIOUS TIME IN THE ROLE? They were both in updated, more modern settings—settings that would be closer to things that people can visually relate to. I feel very fortunate in that both of them that I've done, I think they really highlight the humanity of all the characters, rather than a stereotype of the character. This production is very focused on the storytelling between this man and this woman, and the complexities of their relationships—these ideas that are ever-enduring in terms of human relationships of love vs. lust, freedom vs. possession and how physical chemistry with a person doesn't make them the best choice for a partner.

YOU'VE PERFORMED WITH THE BLO BEFORE, STARRING IN DON GIOVANNI LAST YEAR. WHAT DO YOU ENJOY ABOUT WORKING WITH THEM? They hire wonderful people, who come prepared. From day one, we can have dialogue about the story we're planning on telling and the things we want to highlight. There's always an atmosphere of respect. Everyone here wants to put on a great performance and give the audience something that will be memorable, a powerful experience.

ARE YOU LOOKING FORWARD TO PERFORMING AT THE BOSTON OPERA HOUSE? Very much so. I have never actually been in the Boston Opera House. ... I'm very excited to get into the theater and try it out. It's a beautiful space, which I think is very fitting for our Carmen production.

WHAT'S THE MOST IMPORTANT THING YOU DO TO BEFORE PERFORMANCES? Rest. I want to rest my voice, but I also want to rest my body. Carmen is typically a very physical show. I tend to get manhandled quite a bit. Sometimes I find that after a long series of rehearsals, I'm a little sore. The best thing to do is to be quiet, cook myself a nice dinner, maybe go see a movie. It's incredibly boring, but that's the best way for me to fill my gas tank.

THE TOTALITARIANS

PARTY LINES

November's election is on everyone's mind, so it's no surprise that plays about the political process are popping into local theaters. While they're not directly depicting the Trump-Clinton showdown, each play's director highlighted a line from the script that best relates to the current political climate.

A dimwitted Nebraskan is propelled toward higher office by a power-hungry campaign strategist in Gloucester Stage's The Totalitarians, directed by Jeff Zinn and running through Sept. 24.

Penelope Eoster: "A campoign is o dote. Between you and me. And we're dancing, we're getting drinks, we're touching eoch other's shoulders ond our nipples are poying ottention, but I need more if we're gonno be on L.T.R."

A liberal media member releases a satirical right-wing book that's taken all too seriously in Titanic Theatre Company's The Return to Morality, directed by Michelle Aguillon at Central Square Theater through Sept. 25.

Arthur Kellogg: "I would like you to osk yourself: If my life wos in the honds of onother person, to whom would I gront this power? You soy to me, electing o new president is not o motter of life ond deoth. But I ossure you, it is, becouse the president of this country holds your life in his honds."

Jim Petosa directs New Repertory Theatre's production of Good, C.P. Taylor's drama about a moderate professor who is lured into the Nazi party in 1930s Germany. It plays Oct. 8-30 at the Charles Mosesian Theater in Watertown.

Bok: "Some people used to soy he doesn't know what the fuck he's tolking about, Hitler.... Just forts out of his mouth insteod of his osshole."

Directed by Dawn Simmons, Warrior Class, a drama about an up-and-coming New York politician haunted by a past transgression, plays at the Lyric Stage Oct. 21-Nov. 13.

Julius: "Besides, what om I going to run on if I don't do onything?"
Nothon: "Well here's the thing, you don't wont to give them onything to hong you with."

THE PLOUGH AND THE STARS

Irish Invasion

The Irish are coming! The Irish are coming! In honor of the 100-year anniversary of the Easter Rising that spurred the Irish independence movement, a pair of Irish theater companies are performing in Boston. First up is the Abbey Theatre's production of Sean O'Casey's 1926 play The Plough and the Stars, which tells the Easter Rising story through the eyes of residents of a Dublin tenement. Directed by Olivier Award winner Sean Holmes, the play hits the A.R.T.'s Loeb Drama Center Sept. 24-Oct. 9. Also dropping anchor in Boston is Gare St Lazare Ireland, a theater company that specializes in bringing Samuel Beckett's works to life. Here All Night uses music from his novel Watt and spoken word from Beckett's other texts. Catch the New England premiere Oct. 5-9 at the Emerson/Paramount Mainstage, and stick around for post-performance, onstage viewings of Brian O'Doherty's Hello Sam exhibit—an ode to Beckett used as part of the set.

WHEN JANUARY FEELS LIKE SUMMER

AN AMERICAN IN PARIS

LUCKY SEVEN More hot tickets around town

Written by acclaimed Bod Jews playwright Joshua Harmon and headed to Broadway in February, Significant Other tells the story of a 20-something single gay man who worries about his own romantic life after his friends begin marrying. SpeakEasy Stage's production runs through Oct. 8 at the Calderwood Pavilion at the BCA.

Set in Harlem, When January Feels Like Summer mixes humor with a love story that connects three communities: Indian, black and transgender. Catch the Underground Railway Theater's production of Con Thomas' award-winning script Oct. 20-Nov. 13 at Central Square Theater.

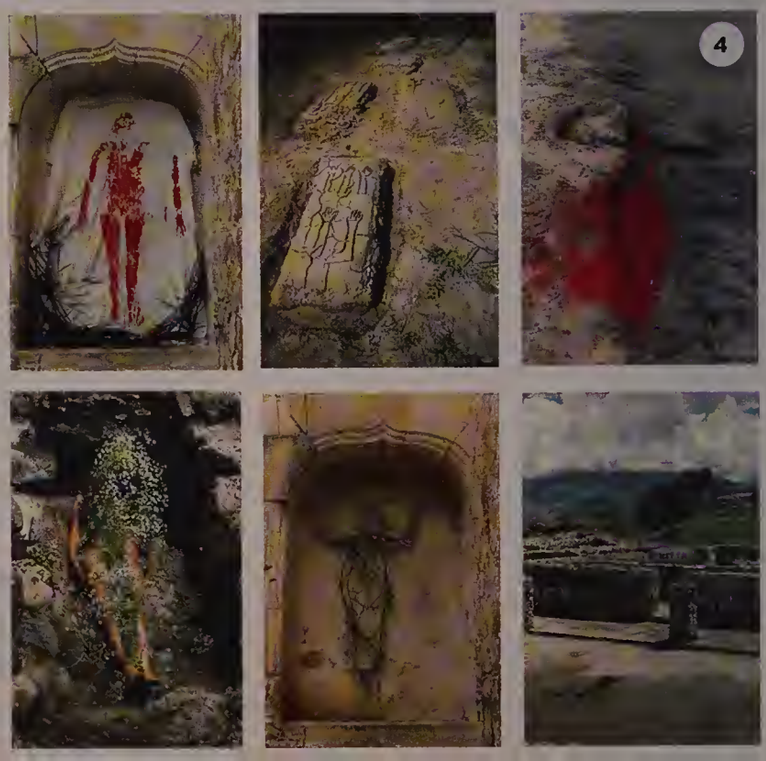
After turning heads in New York and London (and perhaps a few stomachs—be prepared for some gore), Revolt. She Said. Revolt Again. makes its New England premiere with Company One. Composed of funny and frightening vignettes that vivify the constraints faced by modern women, the play hits the stage at the BCA's Plaza Theatre Oct. 21-Nov. 19.

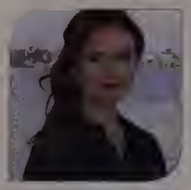
George Gershwin's 1928 composition An American in Paris inspired the Oscar-winning 1951 film of the same name, which in turn led to this Tony-winning play that opened on Broadway in 2015. The show closes its Great White Way performances in October and begins its U.S. tour at the Wang Theatre Oct. 25-Nov. 6.

Prolific playwright Melinda Lopez takes the ArtsEmerson stage for Mala, her one-woman show that draws on her Cuban heritage and centers on a mother-daughter relationship. See the world premiere Oct. 27-Nov. 20 at the Emerson/Jackie Liebergott Black Box Theater.

Two rising stars on the Boston theater scene, playwright Kirsten Greenidge and director M. Bevin O'Gara, team up for the world premiere of How Soft the Lining, which explores the friendship of Mary Todd Lincoln and her freed black seamstress in the wake of President Lincoln's assassination. Bad Habit Productions stages the play Nov. 5-20 at the Calderwood Pavilion at the BCA.

Oregon Shakespeare Festival's Bill Rauch (All the Woy) returns to the American Repertory Theater to direct Fingersmith, based on Sarah Waters' best-selling novel about a pickpocketing maid who falls for an heiress in Victorian England. The play drops the fourth wall and runs Dec. 4-Jan. 8 at the Loeb Drama Center.





Collecting Their Thoughts

Landmark exhibit First Light: A Decade of Collecting at the ICA gathers more than 100 works the museum has acquired since its 2006 move to the waterfront, from its permanent collection's very first promised piece—Cornelia Parker's Hanging Fire (Suspected Arson), featuring a building's charred remnants strung up and suspended in midair—to recent additions being displayed for the first time. On view through Jan. 16, it's an exhibition that rewards repeat viewings (and not just because two new sections rotate in on Oct. 8). We tapped four staffers from different departments at the ICA to find out which work in the show keeps them coming back again and again.

1) Ragnar Kjartansson, The Man, 2010 "This 49-minute video by Icelandic artist Ragnar Kjartansson, featuring blues legend Pinetop Perkins, really draws me in," says admissions manager Gail Leavitt. "As a musician, I find his performance captivating and the imagery jarring, with the artist choosing to display this renowned pianist against such a desolate backdrop."

2) Dana Schutz, Sneeze, 2002 "This small but mighty canvas captures the mundane, grotesque and captivating aspects of a woman sneezing, enhanced by the artist's tactile brushwork and use of color," says curatorial assistant Jessica Hong. "What enthralls me about this work are its active paradoxes: The repugnant is beautiful, the ordinary is extraordinary, the static is dynamic, as you find yourself both grimacing and smiling."

3) Marisol, Couple No. 1, 1965–66 "The cone is inflated by a fan inside the sculpture, so when you stand in front of it, you feel a stream of cool-ish air on your face. I wouldn't call it pleasant, but it is a tactile way to experience the art—without touching, of course!" says education department assistant Lenny Schnier. "The work sits in a lineage of objects and people that have compounded machine and human form, and it's really freaking awesome that a 50-year-old sculpture resonates with our contemporary selfie-crazed cultural zeitgeist."

4) Ana Mendieta, Silueta Works in Mexico, 1973–77/1991 "It is incredible to work for a museum that has one of my all-time favorite works of art in its collection," says membership manager Chris Hoodlet. "In this series, Mendieta blends performance and photography, human and nature, presence and absence in a series that makes you reflect on your relationship to the earth. In these sublime images, Mendieta's immersion into the landscape of Mexico, and the traces that remain, show how powerful the forces of nature are in comparison to humanity."

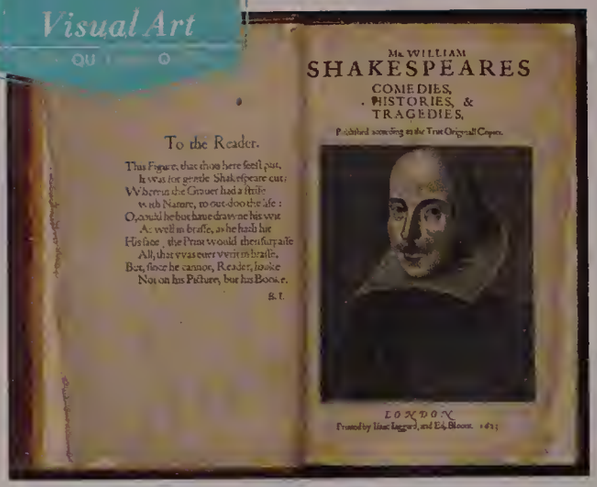
LIZ NOFZIGER IN THE RUBY CARREL

A RED-HOT RESIDENCY



Libraries are full of stories, but local artist Liz Nofziger is on the hunt for ones that can't be found in the catalogue. As the Public Library of Brookline's inaugural artist in residence, Nofziger has been gathering library-related memories for her Library Study project, taking submissions online and IRL at a tiny study room in the main branch, which she's transformed into the Ruby Carrel—a red-lit nook where visitors can slip handwritten notes into a gap between the desk and the wall. "It feels like you're kind of giving it to the building, giving it into the architecture, which I like," says Nofziger, who'll be creating installations inspired by the responses this fall. She answered some questions about her studio in the stacks.

YOU STARTED THE PROJECT BY READING WRITTEN HISTORIES OF THE LIBRARY. WHAT DID YOU DISCOVER? The Public Library of Brookline has always been a really innovative institution. One interesting fact is that they had the first children's room in the nation. Initially it was in the basement, and the janitor was in charge of the children. There were two publications they were allowed to look at, and only if they had clean hands.... Another crazy fact is that the original library building was moved from one spot to another—the whole building, ground level up. It was moved over two months on jacks and railroad ties, so it was this crazy engineering feat, and they never closed service. You could still go in! Learning this stuff, it totally makes sense that they're willing to invite an artist in to play with the library.

SO WHAT'S IT LIKE INSIDE THE RUBY CARREL? I used translucent vinyl on all the windows, so it's a little surface, a chair and these two glass walls that now are covered with this red, which sort of puts you inside a piece of candy. I really like the playful candy association of the color red, but also the kind of seedy, dirtier side—like red-light districts, the whole range of associations with this color. It's really juicy. You're getting an altered view of the outside world—I chose the study carrel closest to School Street, so you have traffic going by, kindergartners walking past, life happening outside in this new rose framing—and the sun also brings a spray of red light into the library. So it's transforming your view of the exterior and experience of the interior.

ANY ESPECIALLY MEMORABLE SUBMISSIONS SO FAR? There was a really lovely story of two people meeting by chance and connecting over a conversation about a book, and then this led to a life together. She was there to do some research, the kind of research you would do on the internet now. So there's something about the time before we all had this immediate access to information in our private world, where you had to go somewhere and spend time in a physical place, and this happened to lead her to this conversation that changed the course of her life. So that was cool, and sort of mourning the time before we had computers in our pockets.

Visit brooklinepubliclibraryair.org to submit your own story, and take in a tour and a talk by Nofziger at Library Study's closing event on Nov. 10.

SPEAKING OF VOLUMES

Two fall exhibits are taking a page from the past. First up is Beyond Words: Illuminated Manuscripts in Boston Collections, the largest exhibition of medieval and Renaissance books ever staged in North America. On view through fall, the show spans 260 tomes at three venues: Harvard's Houghton Library, BC's McMullen Museum and the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, where you can view lavishly hand-painted works of art that have spent centuries under cover. Then on Oct. 14, the Boston Public Library marks the 400th anniversary of the Bard's death with the opening of Shakespeare Unauthorized, an exhibition of early editions of his plays, including the library's own First Folio, pictured here. On display through March 31, it also features forgeries, theatrical memorabilia and other rarities related to the drama king.

IF THE SHOE FITS

Then try this pair of exhibits on for size. Running now through Jan. 1, New Sole of the Old Machine brings steampunk creations from nine artists and artisans to the Fuller Craft Museum in Brockton, once the country's top producer of shoes. Then from Nov. 19 through March 12, Shoes: Pleasure and Pain treads through Salem's Peabody Essex Museum, where the 300 pairs on display will include ancient Egyptian sandals, the Vivienne Westwood platforms that famously tripped up Naomi Campbell's runway walk, pieces from the personal collection of late local fashion icon Marilyn Riseman and this trio from Chilean-born artist/designer Sebastian Errazuriz's "12 Shoes for 12 Lovers" collection.

CAITLIN BERRIGAN'S TREATISE ON IMAGINARY EXPLOSIONS, VOL. II, FEATURED IN OBSTACLE COURSE

PHOTO OPS

Two influential photographers who shot indelible images for Vogue come in focus this fall. Lesley University's Lunder Arts Center is hosting the only New England stop for Irving Penn: Beyond Beauty, the first Penn retrospective in nearly 20 years. Pulled from the Smithsonian American Art Museum's collection, the 146 photographs include his famed fashion photos along with 1930s street scenes, shots from his 1940s travels through the South (like 1941's Young Boy, Pause Pause, shown here), still-life work, portraits of the likes of Salvador Dali and a never-before-seen video of the photographer in action. It's all on view now through Nov. 19, but make sure you're camera-ready for a special event on Oct. 1, when Lesley photography faculty will be taking free Penn-style portraits of gallery goers. Then from Oct. 7 through March 26, the deCordova Sculpture Park and Museum presents Edward Steichen: Twentieth-Century Photographer, showcasing early Pictorialist photos, celebrity portraits, cityscapes and commercial work for Condé Nast by a multihyphenate talent often credited with the conducting the first modern fashion shoot way back in 1911.

ALONE TOGETHER

You'll likely want to fly solo to see Fertile Solitude, an exhibit on view at the BCA's Mills Gallery from Oct. 14 through Dec. 18. Curated by FLUX. Boston founder Elizabeth Devlin, the maze-like installation will feature work by 15 artists emphasizing individualism and introspection. Meanwhile, the New Art Center is taking an opposite tack with Obstacle Course, an exhibition that's all about collaboration. Exploring the often-unexpected challenges artists face when working with nonartists or inviting participation from the public, it's on view from Oct. 28 through Nov. 22. Bring a friend.

Comedy Decoded

New York native Carly Aquilino became the voice of a (more-than-occasionally misguided) generation when she joined MTV's Girl Code in 2013, dispensing advice on everything from hairstyles and vacations to dating and genitalia. She has since gone on to star in several spinoffs, including this summer's Guy Code vs. Girl Code on MTV2, as well as headline her own national comedy tour. She helped us crack her code in advance of her stop at Laugh Boston on Dec. 1-3.

WHAT CAN WE EXPECT FROM YOUR STAND-UP SHOW? I've been on the road doing stand-up for a few years. It's interesting to see how my material changes as the years go by depending on what I'm going through. Right now I'm talking a lot about my dating life, which is pretty much nonexistent, but, boy, there's a lot to say about it.

HOW DOES YOUR STAND-UP COMPARE TO YOUR WORK ON MTV? There is definitely more freedom in stand-up. I can talk about whatever I feel, and with TV, they give us topics to discuss. They both have their positive aspects, but I like stand-up more because it's what I first started doing and there is something great about being on stage and feeling energy from an audience.

YOU MUST GET ASKED ABOUT DATING ADVICE ALL THE TIME. WHAT'S ONE THING YOU WISH PEOPLE WOULD FIGURE OUT ALREADY? It's funny because I am great at giving advice, but terrible at taking my own. I think something every girl struggles with is accepting when a guy isn't into you. I will tell people this constantly, but if a guy doesn't answer my text messages, I tell myself he lost his phone or is in jail before I accept that he doesn't like me. Also, I've dated a lot of guys who have been to jail. This could be my problem.

THE FLIRTING BETWEEN YOU AND THE ROCK IS STILL GOING STRONG ON TWITTER. DO WE HEAR WEDDING BELLS? I'm ready to get married whenever he is. Carly "The Rock" Johnson—beautiful.

Electric Conductor

For the 2016-17 season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has plans to shake things up, starting with the appointment of the orchestra's very first artistic partner, Thomas Adès. The venerable British conductor and composer will join the BSO and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players for three years as a resident conductor and performer, beginning with an Oct. 28 performance of Schubert's Winterreise, which has Adès taking a seat at the piano. Adès' first fall with the orchestra will also include Nov. 3-5 performances of the composer's own 2013 composition for baritone, mezzo-soprano and orchestra, Totentanz (Dance of Death). We tapped the—rather cheeky—Adès for some intel on what we can expect from his time with the BSO.

On whether they created the position just for him... "They did! Which I think is very sensible because we musicians come in all different shapes and sizes."

On what he hopes to accomplish... "Make wonderful noises."

On his dream piece to perform or conduct with the BSO... "A rock opera by Johann Strauss Jr. based on Game of Thrones featuring Björk, Beyoncé and Steeleye Span."

On whether he's excited to perform his own work... "Uncontrollably."

On how he'd describe that work to the uninitiated... "A riot at a medieval Super Bowl with the teams Death vs. the Human Race. There can only be one winner, but the crowd is with the human race and we're playing at home."

JUKE'S ON YOU

Before Kim, Scott Bradlee made a play to break the Internet in 2010 with a self-recorded video of the jazz pianist and some friends performing a bluesy cover of Lady GaGa's "Paparazzi" under the moniker Postmodern Jukebox, which has racked up hundred of thousands of views. Now touring internationally with a crew of rotating musicians, he releases a new video of a popular song—ranging from Miley to the White Stripes—covered in an old-timey style to legions of YouTube fans each week. We checked in with Bradlee before Postmodern Jukebox stops at the Wang Theatre on Oct. 6.

HOW DID POSTMODERN JUKEBOX COME ABOUT? It was something I did as a kid. I loved old styles of music, ragtime, jazz, Motown, all those things. I was a pianist, so I played them all. And of course my friends didn't know any of that stuff; they listened to pop music, Eminem or whatever. But I wanted to still be a part of that conversation, so I'd take the songs that they knew and turned them into styles that I love. At the time, it was just kind of a fun party trick. Later, I moved to New York and was trying to find work as a jazz pianist, and I found that it was pretty hard to get people excited about jazz. So I set up a video camera in whatever basement apartment I was living in and recorded myself playing these things that I used to do, playing pop songs as ragtime. And as luck had it, the very first one that I did went viral.

SO DO YOU CREDIT YOUTUBE FOR YOUR SUCCESS? Yeah, I think it was a project that could only really break on the Internet in some ways. I think if I'd told some record label about this, they'd be like, "Well, there's no way that can be a thing. That sounds so niche." What was great about going directly to fans is that I could connect to them in a way that I'd get ideas from them, and it became something that fans took ownership of.

HAVE YOU RECEIVED ANY CRITICISM FROM THE "SERIOUS" JAZZ COMMUNITY? I think they've been pretty welcoming overall. Most people can see that getting people interested in jazz in any way is a good thing for the community as a whole. I hear from a lot of people, like, "Yeah, my jazz band was doing this tour and we had, like, three Postmodern Jukebox cover bands open for us." So it's certainly resulted in a lot of work for a lot of people, and it's just cool to see kids come to the show and then write to me saying, "I'm so inspired now and I'm checking out Louis Armstrong and Ella Fitzgerald and all these greats that influenced you."

WHAT HAVE BEEN SOME OF YOUR FAVORITE COVERS OF LATE? We did a doo-wop version of "MMMBop" recently. It seemed like such an obvious thing, like doo-wop/"MMMBop"—how has this not been done? And we did a 1920s kind of New Orleans thing with Justin Bieber's "Love Yourself." I had released a version of it in black-and-white, kind of like the 1920s, and a lot of people thought it was an actual song from the era and were sharing it around Facebook—no joke—thinking that Justin Bieber had ripped off this song from 1929. [Laughs.]

MUM'S THE WORD Talk about mommy issues. Montreal-born writer/director Xavier Dolan is building an award-winning filmography around mother-son relationships. First was 2009's I Killed My Mother, his semi-autobiographical directorial debut about a gay teen at odds with his mother, played by fellow Québécoise Anne Dorval. She returns in 2014's Mommy, playing the titular role as a widow who cheeks her violence-prone son out of an institution to live at home. Conflict (and Oedipal overtones) ensue, and so did international success—the film has netted nearly 50 awards, including the Jury Prize at Cannes. Hit the mother lode when the film screens in French with English subtitles at the French Cultural Center on Sept. 21. / Meghan Kavanaugh

Don't Breathe ★★★ Known for the buckets of gore he unleashed in his Evil Dead remake in 2013, director Fede Alvarez has set his latest horror film in another enclosed space, but he's shifted his focus into suspense territory—and the results are thrilling. "Just because he's blind doesn't mean he's a fucking saint, bro," says burglar Money (It Follows' Daniel Zovatto) to his teenaged accomplice Alex (Goosebumps' Dylan Minnette), who's reluctantly entered a life of crime because of his puppy-dog devotion to Money's girlfriend and fellow accomplice, Rocky (Evil Dead's Jane Levy), who's trying to find a way out of Detroit. Money has discovered that their sightless old mark (Avatar's Stephen Lang) is sitting on a pile of cash in his expansive home on an empty street, but what he doesn't know is that their intended victim is a military vet who's more than capable of violently turning the tables on the would-be thieves, vision or no. And lest you think this is just a recipe for some mindless fun, the setup also serves as a sly commentary on how the economically depressed can turn on each other to survive a system that's rigged against them. Expertly crafted, if occasionally over the top, this is one of the best home-invasion thrillers since 1967's Wait Until Dark. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hell or High Water ★★★1/2 Director David Mackenzie's crime drama may be set in modern-day Texas, but it's a classic Western through and through, full of moral grays and another towering performance by the gray-maned Jeff Bridges. He's back in Rooster Cogburn mode as a smarter-than-he-sounds Texas ranger, Marcus Hamilton, a jut-jawed good ol' boy who's equally at home chasing bank robbers as he is hurling racial slurs at his half-Comanche, half-Mexican partner, who loves the old coot anyway. Speaking of those bank robbers, they're a pair of desperate brothers: Tanner Howard (Ben Foster), a gun-happy career criminal who's recently been released from prison, and his younger, smarter brother, Toby (a revelatory Chris Pine), a divorced dad who's always walked the straight and narrow. But when the Howards face losing the land that's been in their family for generations, Toby works out a rather brilliant plan: They'll only rob the registers at each branch of the bank that's threatening to take everything from them. Stealing just a few thousand from each location keeps their crime spree out of federal jurisdiction, so if Hamilton can't catch them, they may just save the family's land after all, paying for it with money taken from the very company that's about to foreclose. Taylor Sheridan's screenplay also robs rather liberally from Cormac McCarthy's work, and it's even better than his script for last year's Sicario. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Light Between Oceans ★★ Director Derek Cianfrance's last film, 2012's The Place Beyond the Pines, felt too novelistic, even though it was an original screenplay, overcooked by Cianfrance with co-writers Ben Coccio and Darius Marder. His latest, which he actually adapted from a novel (a 2012 best-seller by M.L. Stedman), suffers from too many movie cliches. But where these pictures struggle the most is in their shared use of an ambitious device that fails in both cases: a dramatic shift midway through that introduces new characters and forces you to rethink the story you've been watching unfold. In the case of The Light Between Oceans—which takes its title from the lighthouse on a small windswept isle off the coast of Western Australia that serves as the setting—there's a dreamy romance that fills the first half, until a twist of fate fractures the picturesque marriage we've just seen develop between Isabel Graysmark and World War I vet Tom Sherbourne (real-life couple Alicia Vikander and Michael Fassbender) once Hannah Roennfeldt (Rachel Weisz) enters the mix. Sumptuously shot by Australian cinematographer Adam Arkapaw, it's beautiful to gaze upon, but ultimately barren. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Morgan ★★ Perhaps you enjoyed Ex Machina, last year's sci-fi thriller about a sentient android given nubile human form? Well, this year's model is a lot less sexy. Here, "Morgan," who's described as an "L-9 prototype," an "organism," an "asset" and, ultimately, a "product," is played by Anya Taylor-Joy (The Witch), made up to look like a hoodie-wearing albino. But Morgan's eyes aren't red; they're black and soulless, not unlike a certain shark that doubled as a "killing machine," terrifying moviegoers back in '75. You'd better believe this detail is purposeful—and just one more borrowed part from other, better films. Not that Morgan doesn't show initial promise, when "risk assessment consultant" Lee Weathers (Kate Mara) arrives at a secluded countryside compound to evaluate an "accident" Morgan was responsible for. But if willfully and repeatedly stabbing a scientist (Jennifer Jason Leigh) in her eye can be termed an accident, then this film may as well be called Alien, the Ridley Scott classic this picture also cribs from. Not surprisingly, Morgan marks the directorial debut of Sir Ridley's son, Luke, who's inherited some of his dad's style. Hopefully, the ideas will

Morris from America ★★★ Writer/director Chad Hartigan sweetly subverts cliches with his coming-of-age tale, an unassuming crowd-pleaser that doubles as a fish-out-of-water comedy. The movie may be small in scale, but it's big in heart, and much of the credit for this goes to the believably messy father/son dynamic that serves as the picture's lifeblood. The titular character, whom we'll come to know as "Mo," is a slightly doughy 13-year-old, one of "only two brothers in Heidelberg," as his doting but mostly absent father, Curtis, puts it, having transplanted the pair from the Bronx to Germany after the death of their beloved wife and mother. Mo is portrayed by newcomer Markees Christmas, and whether through inexperience or design, he plays the confused young man as an introvert, tentatively taking in his new surroundings with little knowledge of the scenic town's language or customs. The real eye-opener, however, is Craig Robinson. Part of the large ensemble on NBC's The Office from 2005 to 2013, the gifted comedian has gone on to establish himself as an indispensable supporting player in a host of films. Given the chance to stretch his legs in a dramatic role, he's this charming little movie's biggest surprise. When Curtis relates the story of how he wooed Mo's mother, connecting the past and the present, it's one of the sweetest moments in a film that's filled with them. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Queen of Katwe ★★★ After their modest success with 2014's Million Dollar Arm, Disney is back with another inspirational sports drama set in a foreign land. And although both are based on true stories, this tale of a young girl from rural Uganda who pursues her dream of becoming a chess champion doesn't rely on the trope of a white American who makes it possible, as John Hamm's character did in the former film when he traveled to India to tap cricket players who might excel at playing baseball. Instead, director Mira Nair (Monsoon Wedding) allows her film to be an East African story through and through, utilizing the native tongues of English and Swahili. As soccer player-turned-missionary Robert Katende (Selma's David Oyelowo) begins teaching strategic thinking and risk-taking to underprivileged youths through the game of chess, he recognizes the potential in 10-year-old Phiona Mutesi (luminous newcomer Madina Nalwanga), encouraging her to compete on a higher level. Alas, Phiona's mother (Lupita Nyong'o, an Oscar winner for 12 Years a Slave) would rather her daughter be more practical and sell corn to help keep a roof over their heads. OK, so William Wheeler's script (based on the book by Tim Crothers) isn't exactly breaking much new ground, but the winning performances greatly elevate this familiar story. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Snowden ★★ Oliver Stone has a terrific new film out, and it's only 1-minute long. It's a clear and concise public service announcement that manages to be both prescient and playful, and it plays before his new feature, which may also be prescient, but is far from playful during its punishing 134 minutes. Say what you will about the crackpot conspiracy theories espoused in 1991's JFK, but that film featured Stone working at the peak of his powers, aided by experimental cinematography and flamboyant editing, both of which were recognized with Oscars. There was an enormous energy to that film—a chronicle of the Kennedy assassination that questioned the official story—and it's almost wholly missing from this unexpectedly dull look at Edward Snowden and his journey from flag-waving patriot to controversial whistleblower and wanted man. Snowden's story is familiar from wildly divergent news coverage, along with Laura Poitras' nonfiction film from 2014, Citizenfour, and Stone and his co-screenwriter, Kieran Fitzgerald, recreate the making of that Oscar-winning documentary, with Melissa Leo playing Poitras, holed up in a Hong Kong hotel room with Joseph Gordon-Levitt's Snowden as she trains her camera on him and we watch his life unfold from 2004 to 2013. They're both terrific actors, but here they're as stagnant as the ugly-looking, linear film that constrains them. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Southside with You ★★★ What could have descended into a work of hagiography instead ends up a film of small pleasures as first-time director Richard Tanne dramatizes the first date of a couple of young lawyers during a bright summer day in Chicago in 1989. She's Michelle Robinson, and he's a heavy smoker by the name of Barack Obama. OK, so the cigarettes are the closest thing you'll find to a negative in this portrayal of the future president of the United States. And though you may walk away from the theater concerned for the real-life president's extended health outlook, little-known actor Parker Sawyers makes a respectable match for Obama, both physically and with laid-back charm.

Sure, Sawyers may lack the toothy smile, but when he delivers an inspiring speech to an adoring public at a community meeting, the man he will become is obvious. This scene is the centerpiece of what Barack keeps referring to as an extended "date," though the future Mrs. Obama (Tika Sumpter from the Ride Along films) will have none of it, reluctantly accompanying her pursuer after he coaxes her into an art exhibit, a showing of Do the Right Thing and, finally, the Baskin-Robbins where Michelle protested right up until the moment she and Barack shared their first kiss. It's a fairly well-known story, and Tanne has crammed a bit too much foreshadowing into his script, but there are worse films to enjoy with your own date. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Suicide Squad ★1/2 I hope you liked that extraneous scene that stopped Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice cold, the one where Wonder Woman pauses in front of her computer to watch fan-service video clips that introduced the Flash, Cyborg and Aquaman, because the first reel of writer/director David Ayer's Suicide Squad—which promised to be DC Comics' big-screen equivalent to The Dirty Dozen—is dedicated to introducing us to "the worst of the worst." Amanda Waller (Viola Davis), the ethics-free, bureaucratic head of a secret government agency, flips through a dossier over dinner; one by one, we see photos of the anti-heroes she'll eventually bring together as flashes of their backstories are shown, accompanied by a "hip" collection of licensed songs that's been carefully curated to sell soundtrack tie-ins. Sadly, Waller turns out to be much more intimidating than the supervillains she assembles, from "world's deadliest assassin" Deadshot (played with not-so-deadly snark by Will Smith) to Harley Quinn (Margot Robbie, covered in sex appeal and little else), one-time shrink and current girlfriend of the Joker. Speaking of, if you're coming to this film based on the promise of seeing Jared Leto's tatted, grill-toothed take on the Clown Prince of Crime, you're in for a letdown. Barely appearing, he's about as frightening as DC's latest unfocused misfire is entertaining. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

War Dogs ★1/2 Todd Phillips, director of the Hangover trilogy, attempts to make a legitimate film with War Dogs—or at least, he tries to be the next David O. Russell. By this, I mean he's made his own American Hustle, which had Russell in full faux-Scorsese mode. Here, Phillips, his team of writers and editor Jeff Groth have stolen wholesale from 1990's Goodfellas and 2013's The Wolf of Wall Street in adapting Guy Lawson's 2011 Rolling Stone article. Hell, they've even cast The Wolf of Wall Street's Supporting Actor Oscar nominee, Jonah Hill, as one of their two leads. Truth be told, he's the best thing in the movie, delivering lines like "I only sell to one gun nut: the U.S. military," as his morally reprehensible character, Efraim Diveroli, recruits his childhood friend, David Packouz (Miles Teller), to be his partner as they luck into a career as high-powered arms dealers. Packouz is positioned as this tale's Henry Hill, narrating the action whenever Phillips stops it with yet another freeze frame—but the former massage therapist never learns his lesson. Phillips and company can't commit to his downfall, instead tacking on a fictional epilogue befitting this entire phony enterprise. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.
